Among the happiest social events of the week was the entertainment of the library benefit thimble party at the beautiful home of Mrs. Louise Buxton, Wednesday afternoon. The spacious rooms were admirably decked with flowers. Mrs. B. E. Sibley entertained the guests with one of her enjoyable readings, and Mrs. Jennie Fadden gave a splendid recitation. The afternoon hours were whiled away agreeably as the ladies chatted over their needlework. The notable hostess served a dainty repast at the conclusion of the pleasant hours. Mrs. C. G. Milligan assisted.

A congenial coterie of guests enjoyed the pleasant informal afternoon arranged by Mrs. S. L. Soden, Friday as a courtesy to Mrs. Wm. Kelsey. Coreopsis were used effectively throughout the rooms of the pretty home and auction bridge was the diversion. When the delicious luncheon was served gorgeous roses were used to beautify the table. Mrs. McIntosh of Redlands was an out-of-town guest.

Members of the Lincoln Club, which is composed of old soldiers and their wives, will visit the public school of North Rialto, Fontana, Rialto, Elo Mausa and Bloomington next Thursday and hold appropriate exercises in observance of the coming Memorial Day. The address will be delivered by Rev. Pickett on Memorial Sunday at the Christian Church and Rev. Warren will address those present at the exercises held Monday at the cemetery. The children of the public schools will assist in this exercise.

Mrs. James Bryan is entertaining her mother, Mrs. Ralph Henry, and sister, Mrs. Bell Inguverson of Pittsburgh, Pa.

MRS. JACKSON TWEEDY entertained the ladies of the west end of the San Fernando Valley at an all-day picnic at her charming foothill home on Friday. The spacious grounds were thrown open to the guests, who passed the day exploring the hills and canyons, gathering wild flowers and ferns. The luncheon was served under the giant oaks, where all did full justice to the good things provided by the hostess. The guest list included Mmes. P. C. Carder, A. C. Trexler, W. B. Hyden, L. P. Mitchell, A. C. Gallow, John Haas, Edwin Morris, L. C. Kimball, Jr., G. W. Burch, A. C. Brubaker, T. C. Hull, Fred Balster, Annie Bridges, George Crocker, William McGeoch, Ellen Hemstreet, A. S. Ralph, E. G. Harbold and Ruth Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Johnstone had as guests at dinner on Sunday the following party of Santa Monica people: Mr. and Mrs. William Ray, Mr. and Mrs. B. White, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Daggett, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Mohr, Mr. and Mrs. Powers, Mr. and Mrs. A. Maier, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Graser, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Hull, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. McNeedey, Mr. and Mrs. Harry White, Mrs. Florence Cleaver, Mrs. A. Victor, Miss Vera Larson, Miss Jessie White, Harold and Charles Daggett, Donald Powers and Willie White.

Mrs. W. D. Hogan of Knoxville, Tenn., and Mrs. W. T. Harmon of Huntsville, Ala., were house guests this week of their sister, Mrs. A. C. Brubaker.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Trexler had as guests at Round Valley ranch this week R. Mercer, A. McClung of Jackson, O., and Mr. and Mrs. Carson Claar of Los Angeles.

Mrs. L. C. Kimball, Jr., president of the Owensmouth Woman's Club, is attending the State Federation at San Francisco.

MRS. JOHN RARICK was the honoree at a reception at the Woman's Clubrooms on Tuesday afternoon, when the members of the club gathered to do her honor as retiring president. A couple of pieces of cut glass were presented Mrs. Rarick by Mrs. George Barlow for the club, in appreciation of the time and courtesy given to club work by Mrs. Rarick. A social hour followed during which refreshments were served. Mrs. Rarick was re-elected president for next year.

The "Fancy Work" Club was happily entertained by Mrs. George Cable on Wednesday afternoon at her home on Campus avenue. The afternoon was spent informally, the time being well divided between fancy work and conversation. Beside the members of the club, Mrs. Cable also entertained a few of her neighbors, the guests being Mrs. LeRoy Bradley, Mrs. Raymond C. Norton, Mrs. S. G. Moore, Mrs. Perry O. Long, Mrs. Nicholson, Mrs. Ernest Mehl, Mrs. Willis Mehl, Mrs. J. B. Goodrich and sister, Miss Bertha Dennison of Honolulu, Mrs. John Rarick, Mrs. J. F. Sawyer and Mrs. R. R. Wisely.

The neighbors of Mrs. Emma Howard of Bangor, Me., gathered at the home of Mrs. George Duley on Monday afternoon when the time was passed away rapidly in chatter and sewing. Mrs. Howard is the guest of her brother, H. L. Wheeler for the winter. The hostesses of the occasion were Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Nellie Hoffman, Mrs. C. M. Sikes and Mrs. Duley. The guests beside the ones mentioned were Mrs. H. L. Wheeler, Mrs. J. B. Goodrich, Miss Dennison of Honolulu, Mrs. Davidson, Mrs. E. P. Chaffee, Mrs. George R. Crane, Mrs. Neal Hess and Mrs. L. H. Smith.

Mrs. D. D. Crew was hostess to the "Merry Wives" Embroidery Club on Friday of this week. As usual with this club, a very happy afternoon was spent with needle or crochet hook. Late in the afternoon refreshments were served to Mrs. W. L. Brown, Mrs. G. A. Brest, Mrs. J. M. Collins, Mrs. W. C. Cline, Mrs. Paul Cushing, Mrs. W. C. Duncan, Mrs. George Gregg, Mrs. C. K. Francisco, Mrs. P. O. Long, Mrs. E. B. Reynolds, Mrs. W. C. Reynolds, Mrs. N. G. Pehl, Mrs. C. M. Sikes.

THE musical season of the Spinet closed on Monday evening with the concert given by Creatore's Band. The whirlwind conductor charmed the audience that filled the Wyatt with the mastery he has over his musicians. A programme of great worth was given including such numbers as the overture from Rossini's "William Tell," the beautiful Suite L'Arliesienne, by Bizet, the barcarolle from "Contest d'Hoffman," and a grand selection from Gounod's "Faust." The solos of Signori de Mitry, Rossi and De Luca deserve credit. The Spinet is now considering the material to be brought here next year for the three artist concerts. It is probable that John McCormack will be secured for one.

Mrs. G. G. Kennard and Mrs. W. E. Putnam were hostesses at a shower given in honor of Miss Ethel Milligan, who is soon to become the bride of William Rohrer. The affair was given at the home of Mrs. Putnam. The guest of honor was called to the door during the festivities, and there presented with an enormous May basket by little Miss Kathryn Lewis. The basket was filled with many articles for the new home. A recipe for "A Good Husband" was read by Mrs. J. O. Goodloe and then presented to Miss Milligan.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Davis, daughter of Mrs. John W. Davis, was made at a week-end party at the Davis mountain home at Squirrel Inn. Algernon Sidney Jenkins of Germantown, Pa., a nephew of E. M. Cope of this city, is the man. The guests at the week-end party were Misses Marion Wilmont, Elizabeth Burns, Persis Williams, Lorraine Williams, Clara Lewis, Ruth Hutchinson and Edith Hutchinson of Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roberts of San Bernardino, Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Ide, Miss Dorothy Davis and Herbert Hubbard, Harry Cook, Volney Kincaid, Walter Johnson, Will Harris of San Bernardino, M. Royal of Los Angeles, Sidney Jenkins and Scott Burns.

The Misses Harriet and Gail Herrin were honor guests at a party given at the home of Mrs. J. J. Prendergast on Walnut avenue. The guests were Misses Norma Cameron, Princess Dike, Nancy Forker, Ellen McMullen, Gladys Griner, Caroline Gill, Julia Thomason, Catherine Hockeridge, Marjorie Thayer, Marion Jennings, Eve Williams, Stella McLaughlin, Frances Wells, Valerie Stone, Margaret Shepherd, Gertrude Lowe, Alice Stanton and Helen Collins.

F. B. Lindsley was the host at an informal luncheon party at the Country Club on Saturday. Mrs. Henry Fisher was hostess for the Saturday afternoon tea.

The beautiful cantata by Sir John Stainer, "The Daughter of Jairus," was given by the combined choirs of the Trinity Episcopal and First Presbyterian churches at the Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening. The soloists were Roy Stone Kendall, tenor; Miss Marguerite Barkelew, soprano, and H. Dana, baritone.

Wedgwood Cameo Jewelry
$2.50 to $6.00.

We are pleased to present an important showing of genuine English Wedgwood cameo jewelry in rings, pendants, brooches, scarf pins and bracelets—an inexpensive type of jewelry that possesses genuine merit as well as unusual beauty.

The mountings are all hand-wrought designs in sterling silver. The white cameo figures appear on backgrounds of blue and green, and are adapted from masterpieces of sculpture.

At prices ranging from $2.50 to $6 these pieces are notable examples of the striking values continually offered by this house.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

No Puffed-up, Burning, Tender Aching Feet—No Corns or Callouses.

"TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters, bunions and chilblains.

"TIZ" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or how long you remain on your feet, "TIZ" brings restful foot comfort. "TIZ" is magical, grand, wonderful for tired, aching, swollen, smarting feet. Ah! how comfortable, how happy you feel. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25-cent box of "TIZ" now from any druggist or department store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy. Just think! a whole year's foot comfort for only 25 cents.

Dr. Osler on Tuberculosis

Sir William Osler, one of the foremost of living medical men, formerly of Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, and now Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford, says in his "Practice of Medicine" (1892) on page 249:

"The healing of pulmonary tuberculosis is shown clinically by the recovery of patients in whose sputa elastic tissue and bacilli have been found. . . . In the granulation products and associated pneumonia a scar tissue is formed, while the smaller caseous areas become impregnated with lime salts. To such conditions alone should the term healing be applied."

Many eminent medical authorities have testified to the efficacy of lime salts in the treatment of tuberculosis, and the success of Eckman's Alterative in this and allied throat and bronchial affections may be due partly to the fact that it contains a lime salt so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated.

Widespread use of this remedy in numerous cases of tuberculosis—many of which appear to have yielded completely to it—justifies our belief that it is worth a trial, unless some other treatment already is succeeding. It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs. We make no promises concerning it any more than reputable physicians give promises with their prescriptions, but we know of many cases in which IT HAS HELPED.

Your druggist has it or can get it, or you can send direct.

JACOB IN SEARCH OF A JOB.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

WE WERE in the Coast headquarters of the Standard Oil Company and the savory tang of distillate was on the mellow May atmosphere.

"Hello, Bill!" said I. "Where's John?"

"Howdy, Jake," greeted the chief. "What John do you mean, demijohn?"

"Naw," I replied. "I mean the big plute, Bro. Rockefeller."

"No, he isn't in," said the chief with sarcasm. "He's out in the barn greasing his buggy. Say, what do you mean anyhow? John D. was never here in his life. I never saw him. Don't you know that he is down in New York showing people how to gather in a million dollars with one hand and pass it out with the other?"

"Sure! That's why I'm going to work with him," said I.

"You're going to work?" exclaimed the oil man. "What are you going to do, for heaven's sake?"

"Well, I guess I'll start in running a gasoline station," answered I, "but not for heaven's sake."

"Vaseline station, you mean, don't you?" interjected the oil man. "If you'd shave and wear a drop skirt you might pass for a manicure lady."

"Don't be foolish," snorted I. "What I want is one of those pretty red and white corners with the shiny windows and the big pump. Looks to me like a good business. I don't know which one I want yet. Guess we better start a new one, eh?"

"You better move on," said the oil man, "or I'll start something all by myself."

"I've got a scheme," continued I, careless of the implied threat. "Gasoline goes with the crowds. You want to get where the people are. Seventh and Broadway is a peach of a junction point and a smear of folks are going both ways. And just think of it, you have no station there! How thoughtless of you. My plan is to tear down the Lankershim and put in a swell station on that corner."

"Why, man alive, it would take a million dollars to buy that block."

"I know it," said I, calmly, "but what do we care? Rockefeller is trying hard to spend his money anyhow, and he shouldn't object to giving our Broadway friends the swellest juice joint on the Coast."

"I don't believe you know anything about the business, anyhow," said the oil man. "It takes a smart man to run a supply house."

"Oh, does it?" exclaimed I, scornfully. "Well, I don't see the point yet. I suppose you began at the bottom of an oil well and worked up. Well, I know something, too. Do you know that gasoline is good [illegible] matism?"

"No, I don't," continued the [illegible]

"Well, it is," [illegible] I. [illegible] shows you are neglecting [illegible] tunities. There are [illegible] in the United States suffering [illegible] rheumatism. If they used [illegible] lons of gasoline a month [illegible] be nearly fifty million gallons —worth $5,000,000 in [illegible] is the market for you. What [illegible] going to do about it?"

"Say!" exclaimed the oil [illegible] miringly. "How do you do [illegible] how? Do you use the [illegible] posing we did give you a [illegible] you suppose you could [illegible] ceipts?"

"Not only count 'em, but [illegible] 'em," said I, promptly.

"Supposing you ran short [illegible] oline and the telephone [illegible] order?"

"I'd connect the hose [illegible] water plug and turn her [illegible]," answered I.

SOCIETY.

riage to Manley Rogers of Berkeley is to take place soon, was the guest of honor at a linen shower given by Mrs. William Chestnut, and Miss Edythe Truslow at the Truslow home on Friday. Miss Horton is now in Los Angeles, and will soon go north for the wedding. The guests at the shower were the Misses Merle Rugg, Mabel Ott, Clara Webber, Ruth Swan, Maude Parr, Mrs. O. R. Schubert, Mrs. C. Smith, Beth Phelps and Bertha Truslow.

The annual picnic of the College Association was held at Sylvan Park on Friday evening. The Rev. H. A. Jump was toastmaster at the dinner and toasts were given by Prof. A. Harvey Collins, C. H. Covell, Miss Eva Benefield, Miss Mary Joy Lombard, Dr. George Robertson and Rev. Ralph P. Smith.

The older members of the Contemporary Club gave a reception at Kimberly Crest, the home of Mrs. J. A. Kimberly, Friday afternoon for the new members of the club, a total of 119, just voted in. Mrs. Kimberly and Mrs. J. J. Suess, president of the club, received. Susanna Graham, Dorothy Davis and Margaret Sanborn served the punch; Mrs. A. Hornby, Mrs. W. M. Kerr, Mrs. H. A. Cherrier and Mrs. C. A. Sanborn presided at the tea tables. Mrs. E. D. Patterson, Jr., gave a musical programme.

MR. AND MRS. E. GISLER entertained at their home Friday evening with a dancing party, which was also to announce the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Teresa, to Richard O. Robinson of Los Angeles. The wedding will be in the late summer or early fall. The table decorations were in rose color, a large auto May basket filled with Cecile Brunner roses, with a little Kewpie at the wheel, forming the centerpiece. The announcement cards were in the form of snapping bon bons, with the names inside.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Blackstock entertained Thursday evening at their country residence at auction bridge. There were thirty-six guests. The house was tastefully decorated in pink roses and ferns. First prizes at bridge were won by Mrs. P. S. Cummings and F. H. Walker, second prizes by Mrs. E. H. Wood and Dr. W. R. Livingston. At the conclusion of the playing the guests were taken to the studio-room adjoining the house, where all were seated for luncheon at beautifully decorated tables.

Nearly 100 guests attended the dancing party given Friday evening under the auspices of the Monday Club, and the affair was one of the successful dances of the spring season.

To celebrate the birthdays of five members of the family which come in the month of May, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bither entertained at a birthday dinner at their residence south of town. The guests of honor, whose birthdays occur this month, were Mrs. Alfred Maulhardt, Miss Vena Williams, little Bernice and Margaret Bither and Harry Bither. A number of guests, members of the families, were present.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Witman entertained a number of classmates of their son, Phillip, with a dancing party Friday evening. The house was prettily decorated with Cecile Brunner roses and ferns, and delicious refreshments were served. The party was a farewell for Phillip Witman, who will leave soon with his parents to make his home on the family ranch at Santa Ana.

Mrs. C. E. Arnold gave a birthday dinner Sunday for her son, Alton, entertaining a few intimate friends, the party motoring to Matilija in the afternoon.

The departure of Miss Berenice Livingston, a popular member of the younger set, for Buffalo, N. Y., where she will attend a young ladies' seminary, was made the occasion of an ovation and train-party by many of her friends, her class at the High School being dismissed for the occasion. She was accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Alice Greiner, and will make her home in Buffalo with another aunt, Mrs. Charles Kennedy, while attending the Buffalo Seminary, where a number of young ladies of her family have received their education.

Mrs. A. J. Clow of Los Angeles is the guest of her sister, Mrs. C. H. Bagley.

Among the week's exposition visitors in San Francisco are Mrs. T. A. Clements and her sister, Miss Katherine Gutfelder of Colorado, who has been Mrs. Clements's guest here for some time. The Carl Dwires returned this week from an enjoyable stay at the exposition.

San Bernardino.

THE engagement of Miss Hazel Cochran and Robert F. Guilfoyle was announced this week by Mrs. Margaret Cochran of No. 340 G street, the wedding to be an event of latter June. The engagement is of special interest, owing to the prominence of the young people concerned, the bride-elect having among her wide circle of friends many of the people most prominently identified with San Bernardino society, while Mr. Guilfoyle is a newspaper man, advertising manager of a local paper and generally known throughout the city, despite the fact that he has been a resident here but two years. He came to this city from Syracuse, N. Y., where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Guilfoyle, reside. He is a popular Elk and a member of the Knights of Columbus. Miss Cochran's family is one of the oldest and best known in San Bernardino.

The promulgation of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Davis, daughter of Mrs. John W. Davis of Redlands, and Algernon Sidney Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Jenkins of Germantown, Pa., made at a house party at Squirrel Inn this week, caused much interest in local society circles. The announcement was made to a group of about twenty young people, all friends of the bride-elect, and guests at the function given by Mrs. Davis. Miss Davis is the youngest of three daughters and the last to leave the rooftree of The Alders, the beautiful Davis home in Redlands.

Delightfully informal was the ball given by the San Bernardino Elks at the clubhouse Monday evening, for the invitations carried with them the intimations of "no programmes, no full-dress suits, no formalities." A large number attended and enjoyed the May festivity.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Irwin, of No. 855 Eighth street, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lulu M. Irwin, to Roy L. Sandefur, the event to be celebrated in early summer. Miss Irwin is a member of the city school teaching force and a young woman who has become generally popular since her arrival here five years ago from Chanute, Kan. The groom-to-be is a local business man and member of a prominent family.

The Woman's Club enjoyed a social afternoon Wednesday and a real party was the entertaining programme. A delightful programme of music, song, readings and folk-dances was given and a special exhibit of handiwork by members of the club was a feature. Mrs. Will L. Brown was chairman of the day. The event was in the nature of a "paving party" and most of the balance of the paving funds were eliminated by the money raised.

Following the example of her younger sister, who was wed amid the most simple of appointments a few weeks ago, Miss Helen Anna Seccombe this week became the bride of Walter Gleason of Watsonville, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Seccombe, of No. 232 East Fourth street. Dr. Walter F. Prince officiated with only immediate relatives present to witness the ceremony. Miss Hilda Seccombe was a pretty April bride, marrying Nelson T. Bogart. They have returned from their honeymoon.

Miss Florence O. Rudell and Roy Roderick Nish surprised friends and relatives and eluded attentions that the event would bring if it had occurred here, going to Los Angeles to be wedded Thursday. The event occurred at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Rudell, at No. 2530 Ocean View avenue. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Rudell of this city, while Mr. Nish is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Nish, both old families in the city. He is a graduate of the University of California and is a pharmacist. The wedding trip will be to San Diego.

Miss Grace May Moore and LeRoy M. Newcombe, whose engagement was announced some time ago, were united in marriage Wednesday afternoon at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Moore, at No. 730 Lesher street. Rev. A. F. Roadhouse performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by the members of the families and intimate friends. The appointments were elaborate. They will reside here.

Santa Paula.

AMID a charming blending of ferns and Cecile Brunner roses, occurred the marriage service uniting Miss Helen Keene and Cecil Foster, Saturday afternoon, at the home of the bride's brother, Herman Keene. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. M. G. Demarest sang "Because." The wedding march was played by Miss Maude Fansler. The bride and groom were unattended, and were preceded by little Miss Robey Jenkins, the bride's niece, daintily dressed in pink. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. C. Buell. The bride wore a becoming traveling suit of blue. The living-room, in which the ceremony was performed, had been lavishly adorned with Cecile Brunner roses and ferns, and the bridal couple stood during the service under a bower of roses and ferns and a wedding bell, a family heirloom about 100 years old. Dainty refreshments were served, and Mr. and Mrs. Foster departed for a short honeymoon trip in the south. They will reside in Santa Paula Canyon.

Covers were laid for more than 100 guests at the banquet given in the banquet hall of the Universalist Church, Thursday evening by the Ebell Club. Baskets of pink roses and ferns made a graceful table decoration. Mrs. J. A. Clark, president of the Ebell, presided. She gave an original poem, and a number of clever toasts were given by the men and women present.

Dr. and Mrs. John Crawford gave a delightful barbecue at 6 o'clock Wednesday evening at their home for the four teachers who have resided at their house during the school year.

Needlework and conversation were combined in making the afternoon pass pleasantly at the home of Mrs. Fred Brown Wednesday, when she entertained the Wednesday Embroidery Club.

In honor of three popular teachers who will, for various reasons, not return to Santa Paula next year, a delightful dinner party was given by the school teachers of the grammar school at the home of Mrs. W. H. Robinson, Monday evening. The guests of honor were Miss Elsie Miller, who leaves soon for the East, Miss Edith Arthur, who will reside with her parents in Fillmore, and Miss Moody, who will be a bride of this year. The table decorations were attractive and appropriate, consisting of a miniature schoolhouse surrounded by a green lawn, with kewpies as teacher and pupils, cleverly dressed and arranged. Miss Franc Palmer acted as toastmistress.

Mrs. C. Palmer entertained with a dinner party complimentary to her daughter, Miss Franc Palmer, Tuesday evening. The event was in celebration of Miss Palmer's birthday and was a surprise to her. All the appointments for the affair were carried out with a color note of pink.

THE delightful home of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Nowall was again the scene of a most enjoyable party Saturday evening, when the lady teachers of the High School entertained the other teachers of the local schools, local students of the State University and a few other guests.

Mrs. Gus Matthews entertained a number of lady friends at her home Saturday afternoon. Cards were enjoyed, followed by dainty refreshments. Twenty-four ladies enjoyed a delightful afternoon.

Mark Worden returned the first of the week from a brief business trip to Utah.

Charles C. Overbury, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, returned Wednesday from a short business trip to Orange.

J. O. Blackburn left this week for a six months' absence in Idaho and the northern part of California.

J. Z. Smith is home from a short business trip to Los Angeles.

The Ladies' Whist Club was entertained Friday afternoon by Mrs. C. V. Lawford. Following the games, delicious refreshments were served.

Mrs. Mark Worden was called to Kansas City, Mo., this week by the critical illness of her mother.

Jack Hopkins, Mrs. Haaf, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Williams and Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Emerson left Saturday by auto for San Francisco and the northern part of the State. Mr. Emerson will attend the Bankers' Convention at San Francisco. The trip will be made in three weeks.

ONE of the pleasant informal affairs of the week was the handsomely-appointed dinner given Mothers' Day by Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Soyster at their home on Burton avenue, in honor of Congressman and Mrs. C. H. Randle of Washington, D. C. The color scheme was dainty pink and white, Cecile Brunner roses being used effectively in a large May basket for the center of the table with a white carnation at each place. Favors consisted of little pink and white baskets filled with salted almonds and bonbons and hand-decorated place cards, carrying out the color motif marked covers for ten. Beautiful Cochet and Testout roses in pink and white were artistically arranged in the living-room, where a pleasant social afternoon was spent. Several piano selections were contributed by Gail and Hale Soyster, the son and daughter of the household.

Miss Nina Conley and Thomas H. White were the recipients of a very pretty affair Thursday when Mrs. White entertained with a 6-o'clock dinner, commemorating their birthday anniversaries. Lavender and yellow were the colors chosen and used in the table embellishments and the menu. Twisted ropes of crepe paper, extending from the chandelier to each cover, were caught in place by hand-painted violets on yellow place cards and favors of crepe paper baskets filled with salted pecans. The same material of yellow was cleverly used in the formation of birds carrying a violet in their bills, while in the attitude of flying. These were suspended on invisible wires of different lengths and covered a space the size of the table. The table was centered by a large May basket tied with the combined colors of tulle and filled with Canterbury bells and asparagus plumosus. Eight guests were seated at the tables lighted with lavender shaded yellow candles. With the serving of ices and birthday cakes all the lights but these were extinguished and in the soft glow sixty-four smaller candles twinkled from the tops of the two beautiful cakes. Among the features of the evening were the birthday gifts and the piano and vocal numbers by Charles E. Morris and Mrs. Anna Wilson of Los Angeles.

Mrs. B. E. Graham of Trenton, Mo., furnished the inspiration for a handsomely-appointed luncheon and an old-fashioned quilting, which was given Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. L. G. Bristol at her home on Greenfield avenue. Sweetpeas, carnations and roses combined with ferns transformed the pretty little bungalow into a bower of loveliness. A low mound of pink and white roses out of which rose a slender vase filled with the same delicate shades of sweetpeas centered the table where covers were laid for ten. The quilting motif of the afternoon was accentuated by a pleasing vocal rendition of, "The Perfect Day" and "The Mountain Stream," by Mrs. Fred Chasworth; the "Herd Girl's Dream" and "Valse Caprice," piano numbers by Mrs. J. F. Lorentz and Miss Beulah Baily.

Hansen and the Fishermen.

Preconceived notions are tenacious things. We hate to get rid of them even when we must. The active imagination constructs a hundred portraits and personalities that are as different from reality as may be. This is especially true when we think of our favorite authors and artists. Their works project mental images of them before us. And how false to facts those images are apt to be!

Looking at the paintings by Armin C. Hansen now on view in Exposition Park, you will at once and inevitably conclude that the painter of such big men and breezy seas must be big and breezy himself. No other sort of man could possibly have done them. You also decide that he must be young—for they have the feeling of strength that abides in youth. You will be right, for Armin Hansen is big and young and strong—the living embodiment of his own pictures.

Not without good and sufficient reasons does he paint fishermen and the sea. The main reason is not that he was born in San Francisco, and "brought up," so to speak, on the bay. You must go much further back than that. His people were born in Schleswig-Holstein, which is German today, but which was Danish not long ago. The Danes, with the other Scandinavians, have been sea rovers and sea conquerors for thousands of years.

So naturally enough, young Armin Hansen, after his art studies in San Francisco and Stuttgart and Munich and Paris, settled for five years at Nieuport, on the North Sea—that same entrancing fishing town that the war has made so famous and so unhappy. From there he traveled on trawlers—exciting traveling it must often have been—on the North Sea and the White Sea, painting when wind and tide permitted, taking notes always. During his stay abroad, as the catalogue informs us, "he associated with many of the most eminent artists of Europe."

No doubt some of these eminent artists did him a lot of good, but not so much good as the fishermen he associated with, for from these he learned a great many things about life, a matter of more importance than things about paint. For it is the splendid vitality of Hansen's pictures that strikes you first and foremost and all the time, and you feel, instinctively, that he got this from himself and nature, not from his fellow artists. His friends, no doubt, gave him pointers on paint, but Hansen handles his brushes so superbly that you know he is expressing himself, and not any rules of thumb.

You can't teach a man how to paint "Whaleboatmen," the largest and most important of the eighteen canvases now being exhibited. The splendid, swinging vigor of the three figures on the wharf—the purple and blue opaline shimmer of morning on the sea—the keen outdoor feeling of it all—the pulsing healthiness of it—these things are not taught in the schools, they are hardly hinted at in the studios, and they cannot be caught by anything less than a man's own spirit. And it must be a big spirit, a soul that is alive. Armin Hansen has caught them and recorded them.

He has caught them at Nieuport, on the bay at Oakland, among the fishermen at Monterey, and (he is now in Los Angeles) he is also thinking of trying his hand at San Pedro. From Nieuport we have "Along the Quay," the picturesque wharf, which is now demolished by shot and shell. In this canvas the color is rich and full, the sky luminous and gray with moisture. From Nieuport, too, we have "The Old Farm," whose red-roofed house has been turned into a hospital.

The gray-green tones in "Off for the Night Catch" are very true and very beautiful. The cool mystery of night broods over the figures that stand and look over the bay. The color in "At the Fishing Grounds" is like a mosaic. Richly attractive is the tawny yellow background, relieved by pure pinks and greens, of "Cowboy Sport, Salinas Rodeo." The figures in "Salmon Packers, Monterey Bay," are seen against a wonderful green sea. "Spring Light, West Flanders," has fresh greens and a living sky.

You can hear the swish of the waves, you can feel the salt touch of spray on your face when you look at "On an Iceland Fishing Boat," and at "North Sea Shrimping Cutters," boats in full sail in a spanking breeze under bellying clouds. "Study in Gray, Monterey," has ten times the color its title suggests, for a flotilla of yachts lies at anchor on a pearly morning sea. It is an exquisite canvas, and shows that Hansen feels the subtle poetry of the quieter moods of nature.

The one portrait in the exhibition is admirable as a picture, and may be truthful as to "likeness"—though this doesn't matter in the least. The grays are handled with discretion—and what luminous, colorful grays they are!—and the placement of the cerise cover of the jewel box has been made with equal knowledge. There is a rich play of color in the lady's face and hat.

Students' Exhibition.

The interesting exhibition of the work of the students of the College of Fine Arts, Garvanza, now being held in the Steckel gallery, where it will remain to the end of this week, will be given further notice in next Sunday's Art and Artists.

IN THE MAY MAGAZINES.

Three among the leading art journals of this country publish articles this month that concern art doings in the Southwest. Even those who are most rabidly jealous for our fair fame could ask for no more than that.

Everett Carroll Maxwell, curator of the gallery in Exposition Park, contributes to the Craftsman an article on "Sculptors of the Southwest: Their Inspiration and their Achievement." The illustrations that accompany it, one of them being the frontispiece of the number, are from works by Julia Bracken Wendt, A. Ianelli, Maud Daggett, and Alexander Stirling Calder.

In Fine Arts Journal, Antony Anderson has a paper on "Some Aspects of Art in the Great Southwest," with illustrations from paintings by Gardner Symons, William Wendt, Robert Henri and Helena Dunlap, and with two views of the gallery at Exposition Park.

The third article is by Hill Tolerton of San Francisco. It appears in the International Studio and treats of "The Art of Maynard Dixon." The four accompanying illustrations are all taken from Dixon's mural decorations on Indian subjects for Mrs. Anita Baldwin's house in Santa Anita.

Arts and Decoration says nothing about Los Angeles or the Southwest this month, but it prints a very good article by Lloyd R. Morris, on the sculpture work of Constantin Meunier.

MEN AND EVENTS.

Ambrose Bierce, the intrepid writer and satirist, for whom search has been made these many months by untiring relatives and friends, has been located at last where the searchers naturally should have looked first—on the firing line. Through the kindly offices of theState Department at Washington he has been located at last on the staff of Gen. Joffre of the French army. Bierce is now close to 73 years of age, and leads by several years the ages of Gen. Joffre and of Gen. Von Hindenberg, whose spectacular campaigns in Poland have attracted so much attention. At 20, Bierce was a captain in the Union forces of the Civil War, and was breveted as major for gallantry. Ever since then he has entertained a secret hankering to become a soldier of fortune. Two years ago he disappeared into Mexico and joined the staff of Gen. Villa, that he might rub elbows and ideas with the Mexican revolutionists and gather at first hand their viewpoints and aspirations.

Clarence Edward Willard, a modest young man from a little town in Ohio, has so mastered, educated and developed his inactive muscles into a state of activity and obedience to his will, he can now add seven or eight inches to his height "while you wait." His ordinary height is 5 ft. 10⅝ in., that being the official measurement given him by Chief of Detectives Collins of Scotland Yard, London, who was one of those who doubted Willard's story, but who was soon convinced of the truth of it as he saw Clarence "going up" before his very eyes until he nearly touched the low ceiling of the room.

Frank Van Wie, a Milwaukee man, after two years' loss of memory, has recovered his reason. He has learned that while he was in his state of loss of memory he married his former sweetheart, Miss Clara Heise of Milwaukee, and a little son born to this union is nearly a year old.

After working five months in the Busch engine factories to learn the business "from the ground up," Drummond Jones, St. Louis tennis champion, "made good," and as a result won the hand and heart and fortune of Miss Marie Busch, daughter of August A. Busch and granddaughter of the late Adolphus Busch, St. Louis' millionaire brewer.

Edward Gottlieb of Munice, Ind., has a dog who brings home anything he finds in the streets which he considers of value. A few days ago he surpassed all his former endeavors by coming home with a brand-new $1 bill in his mouth.

In his twenty-seven years' service as an Atlanta policeman, Sergt. J. W. Whatley never killed a man, never wounded a man, never shot at a man, never hit one with a billy but once. Now he is going to take it easy the rest of his life, having been retired by the City Council on half pay.

A. K. Reese, a native of Baltimore, went to Cardiff, Wales, in 1902, to supervise the building of new blast furnaces at the Dowlais Iron and Steel Works, and to operate them. He has now been made general manager of the works and collieries at Dowlais and Cyfarthfa.

Before you buy
a cut price glove

Think of more than merely the appearance of the glove—consider what service you can expect it to give. How will they wash? Will the fabric pull and turn yellow and the glove lose its shape and become baggy? How will the tips wear?

In Kayser Silk Gloves every one of these features is guaranteed to give satisfactory service. That is why twelve thousand dealers and millions of American women prefer them—why more of them are sold than of all other silk gloves combined.

Be sure you get complete glove value. Ask for Kayser's.

Kayser Silk Gloves cost no more than the ordinary kind; two clasp are always 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 and up; twelve and sixteen button lengths are always 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and up. The name "Kayser" is in the hem and with each pair is a guarantee ticket that the tips will outwear the gloves.

The DOCTOR'S ADVICE
by Dr. Lewis Baker

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free, may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood Sts., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

"Il" writes: "How may I regain my strength? Have been ill for six months, but am well again now, only that I'm so weak and thin. I should weigh forty-five pounds more."

Answer: You will find just the proper tonic and flesh producer you require by using regularly three grain hypo-nuclane tablets. They build up strength, health and flesh. I have prescribed them many times and they are highly recommended.

"Grey" writes: "My hair is coming out. I have dandruff and itching scalp. What may I do to overcome this condition?"

Answer: I always recommend the use of plain yellow minyol to restore the scalp to healthful condition and overcome dandruff and falling hair. Minyol contains no alcohol to dry the hair and make it brittle. It is the best hair and scalp tonic I know of.

"Niagara" writes: "My mind seems to be getting weak as a result of the impoverished condition of my blood, and my whole system seems to be losing strength fast. Please suggest something I may take to restore to my system new life and energy and vitality. I feel twenty years older than I am. Up to a few months ago I hardly knew what it was to feel sick."

Answer: Your nerve cells and tissue cells have not been receiving proper nutrition from the blood. Practice regular habits of living and take three grain cadomene tablets to invigorate the system. They should soon improve your condition.

"Mary" writes: "Please tell me what I can do to get rid of this tired feeling. My mother says my blood is in bad condition."

Answer: If you have bad blood, you need a good system cleanser, blood purifier and tonic. Such you will find in three-grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur.) Constipation, headache, dark, sallow skin, coated tongue, nervousness and sleeplessness and a tired out feeling are symptoms of impure blood.

"W. C. L." asks: "Will you please tell me what to take for kidney trouble? I have constant headache, chills and fever. My feet swell and my complexion is terribly muddy looking, and I have sacks under my eyes. I have pains in my back all the time. I am afraid of Bright's Disease."

Answer: Be careful not to take cold. Get a tube of "balmwort" tablets at once, and take according to directions. These are the best you can take to benefit your condition, and continued treatment should result in permanent relief.

"Mr. R. B." writes: "Two years ago your prescription reduced my weight 15 pounds. I have forgotten the name of the grain tablets you had me use. Please let me know what they were."

Answer: I have always recommended five grain arbolone tablets to reduce weight. Sold by druggists in sealed tubes with full directions.—[Advertisement.]

SETTING THE FASHIONS AT THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Well-dressed Women of Washington's Smart Society. What They Wear—The Time and the Place.

BY MARGARET WADE.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) May 17.—May days in Washington, despite the war clouds elsewhere, are comparatively cheerful days for the feminine portion of the social world. Not that the women of the American capital are indifferent to the woes of their friends abroad. The very generous aid given to the starving multitude in Belgium and to the hospitals of France, of Russia, and of Servia disproves that idea.

Washington is cheerful and happy largely by reason of her ability to relieve suffering, and for the part she is playing in this unusual season which is holding in Washington homes scores of prominent and wealthy women who ordinarily are hundreds of miles away at this time of the year.

While the post-Lenten season has always been a period of social activity and the occasion of much interesting entertaining of an important, but nonofficial character, the activity rarely lasts until the last day of the spring, as is likely in the present year.

The ill wind that blows no good has its illustration in the suspension of all European travel and the promised increase in the patronage and interest of our own American summer resorts. In the meantime the round of dinners and dances continue at the country clubs, with not a few informal entertainments at town houses. To meet the changed condition of a late spring in town there has grown up a style of dress admirably suited to the occasion.

The all-silk gown that is cool and modish, always available and yet distinctly of the present season, is shown in a great variety of styles and growing daily in fashionable favor. Miss Julia Meyer is wearing one of the smartest frocks of this kind, a Premet creation with a double skirt and long-waisted bodice closed in the back. The color is a genuine French green and the edge of each of the two skirts, one some ten inches shorter than the other is finished in a stiff little ruffle, that has the appearance of being wired. While closed in the back by lacings of velvet a shade darker than the silk, the front of Miss Meyer's bodice is cut out nearly to the waist line, showing an under bodice of white net or lace. The sleeves are long and very close from wrist to elbow with a slight fullness at the top.

A small hat of bronze barnyard straw with boots of bronze with tops to match the gown, are the important parts of this costume.

Miss Beatrice Clover, youngest daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Richardson Clover, who was one of the most successful of the society flower venders in aid of the Diet Kitchen, wore on that occasion when she stood for hours on the corner of Connecticut avenue and K street, a charming gown of blue silk with a narrow stripe of white. The blue was much the same shade as the much discussed cornflower, the blossom selected for the sale, and the model a real circular skirt and jacket bodice. A large black hat with transparent brim made a very fascinating flower girl of this most popular of the last winter's debutantes.

Another blue gown showing the color of the cornflower is one worn by Miss Isabelle May. This is in great contrast to Miss Meyer's or Miss Beatrice Clover's, as the foundation skirt is narrow as any of the tube skirts of past seasons, while the overdress which is of white and blue striped, is gathered at the waist, but allowed to fall in straight long lines. The top is a close fitting round bodice, but over this Miss May is wearing one of the new short capes of plain blue cloth.

Mrs. William F. Hitt, the former Miss Katharine Elkins, is wearing the new effect of short skirt and round bodice in battleship gray. The foundation slip is of satin, the top of voile, with surplice bodice finished in reveres of the satin opening over a narrow vestee of white. Mrs. Hitt's skirt hangs like Miss May's in straight lines, with the narrow silhouette. It is also several inches longer than many of the fashionable skirts of the moment being quite to the ankles. A rough straw hat trimmed in white roses is usually worn with this.

Mrs. Larz Anderson, whose great wealth and excellent taste gives her every opportunity of good dressing, had as her Horse Show gown a coat and skirt of pongee or similar silk, very plainly made but on individual lines. Mrs. Anderson's coat was particularly smart, with a slight flare in the skirt and the half belt very wide, but without any decoration. Her skirt was pleated in the back and perhaps six inches from the ground. Her hat was a small round turban matching the gown in color, but of crin, with its coronet brim encircled by asters extremely natural in size and color.

Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, who, with her husband, was one of the much entertained visitors of last week, looked handsome as ever in a street suit of black and white check, with the newest of military hats. Mrs. Depew's skirt was made with hip yoke and had kilt plaited sides, with box plaited front and back, and escaped the ground by at least six inches, showing low cut French shoes of gray leather; real gray, neither putty nor sand color, such as one sees by the rate of thirteen to a dozen any day in the week. The coat was cut in many sections, close fitting to the waist with a flare of the skirt coming to the hips.

The hat, although sold as a military model, had a wide, much flared brim of black crin, with the crown of Belgian blue. Its only trimming was a heavy silk cord going about the base of the crowd tied in two precise loops, with tasseled ends which rested on the brim at the back.

A dinner gown worn by Mrs. Depew was equally becoming and decidedly individual, as this handsome matron refuses, even when buying her gowns direct from Paris makers, to sacrifice any principle of good taste to the fashion of the moment. This particular gown, made by the Paris modiste who has served the New York matron for years, is a wonderful creation of tulle and satin. The latter, which naturally is the foundation, is a soft old pink, the tulle is a deep purple splashed in gold. This forms a long one-piece overdress something of the tunic order, with its skirt encrusted from hem half way to the waist in pink and purple and gold beads, worked in close, round floral motif, making it one of the richest costumes seen in Washington this season. There is a high, narrow girdle, also of the beads, while the top of the gown shows more gold than purple in the arrangement of the tulle drapery over gold lace. There also are sleeves to this gown—short, close bands of gold lace under abbreviated angel sleeves of tulle. The bead embroidery forming the girdle extends upward across the shoulders to fall half way down the back in two long tabs. Directly in the middle of the back the tulle, showing its wonderful combination of color, is gathered into a narrow sash-like panel. Slippers and hosiery to match the pink foundation skirt finish a toilet with which Mrs. Depew wore a necklace of pearls and diamonds.

Mme. Ekengren, wife of the Minister from Sweden, is one of the prominent matrons who has accepetd the silk gown on the new lines suggestive of the old-time polonaise, or redingote. Mme. Ekengren's gown is a petunia color trimmed with little motifs of self-colored braid down each side of the front. The sleeves are long, and the collor high at the back with its military effect hidden by the same braid motifs which appeared in front. Topping this Mme. Ekengren wears one of the new bowl-shaped leghorn hats, its trimming a wreath of small flowers much the same color as the gown, with natural green foliage.

An extremedy modish demitoilet on sedate lines and somber hue, yet distinctly what our grandmothers would have called a "dressy" creation, is the black net and silk gown worn by Miss Cornelia Aldis at afternoon receptions. The skirt is round and escapes the ground by one inch; there are two skirts, in fact, the upper one being net with a deep outside hem of silk. The jacket bodice, which opens over a waistcoat of cream lace, is trimmed in a slight decoration of gun metal and gold. The jacket is a pointed model with its collar carrying out the same lines; here are also used small tassels in black and gold with a further mixture of gun metal, the whole effect being very smart indeed.

Mrs. W. H. Ritter, one of the very latest additions to Washington's spring residents, has the satisfaction of wearing a gown such as she dreamed of in her childhood days, and being distinctly a la mode. This is a midnight blue silk made with round skirt flounced to the waist, such as Mrs. Ritter's grandmother wore in 1840. The material is naturally of 1915. The crinoline effect of today is produced by three whalebones run in the lining of this up-to-the-minute costume, which won the admiration of all beholders at a recent bridge party where its wearer met a number of Washington maids and matrons for the first time.

Mr. and Mrs. Ritter, though contemplating a permanent home in Washington, have leased for the spring season the residence of Mrs. C. A. Munn on Scott circle.

Mrs. Walter Wells is wearing a very smart semitailored suit apparently of a changeable silk poplin, as it shows both taupe and pink. This has a round, kilted skirt with an overdress forming a severe jacket to the waistline, but with long, straight drapery in the back. The hat topping, this is a broad brim, black shape, faced in the dull rose that forms the lighter tone of the gown, with the addition of an irregular line of one-inch French blue velvet ribbon. On the top of the brim is another touch of the blue velvet ribbon with several well-placed, long-stemmed pink roses.

Miss Anna Bell Maury, noted for her correct and distinctive style of dress, has adopted dark blue satin, of light weight, as a material for a utility gown that answers for travel or informal visiting, as well as for the horse show. This unusual creation has a narrow underskirt some two or three inches off the ground, with a side-pleated overskirt several inches shorter. The overskirt, or overdress, is finished about the edge in a heavy self-colored cord. The bodice is apparently a close-fitting boned lining, overlaid in the blue satin, with a few loose pleats across the shoulders. The sleeves are long and close-fitting, and while the collar of white silk opens half-way down the front over a net chemisette, the bodice is fastened in the back, but in a line extending straight from the left shoulder to the belt. This new idea is emphasized by the fastening of bone buttons the size of a nickel and well-worked buttonholes.

There is a soft girdle of six inches deep, which is fastened in front with a double row of the same comparatively large buttons.

A round sailor hat of the finest dark blue Milan, with a high soft a'grette of white, was worn with this very modish creation.

Black and white in real magpie proportions is giving place to black with only an accessory of white in many smart street suits and afternoon gowns. One of the happiest variations of this new method is shown in the white and black waistcoat in a black voile suit worn by Mrs. John Sidney Webb. Like all Mrs. Webb's costumes, this semitailored suit is in modish lines and of extra fine workmanship, with the already-mentioned waistcoat a striped white and black chiffon, in which the material is used both in up-and-down and in cross lines. As a result the lower part shows a checkerboard effect, while from shoulder to bust the lines, which are half an inch wide, run up and down. Mrs. Webb's hat is a rough straw turban, with its trimming the smartest of black satin bows, perched high on one side.

The absence of color in many of the smartest gowns is in a way corrected by the introduction of gay coats and wraps of the sports variety. These loose, comfortable garments can be made of American dyed wool without suffering any comparison with the "made-in-France" or "genuine English" wraps of other seasons.

Mrs. Thomas T. Gaff wears a very smart motor coat of one of the American green tones, a subdued but very pleasant sort of sage or leaf green.

Mrs. John O. Evans wears a cloak of the same general style, but in a soft autumn leaf yellow.

The Gamblers

No game for pikers or hard losers.

TWO VIEWS OF NON-RESISTANCE.

One can not resist, says the Literary Digest, the impression that Mr. Carnegie spoke more or less academically when he declared that should the Germans attempt to invade us he would walk out to meet them and bid them a hearty welcome. Passive resistance may be entertained as a principle when it is conveniently remote as an expedient of action. Yet it seems to be the belief of one of Britain's leading ethical teachers, Mr. Bertrand Russell, lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge, who declares that the best way to cure the Germans of aggression is to endure their onslaughts. The policy of non-resistance contains "an immense measure of wisdom, if only men would have the courage to carry it out," he avers in a recent number of The International Journal of Ethics (Concord, N. H.) Luxemburg tried it and got off much better than Belgium, which adopted the other method. If France and Great Britain had behaved like Luxemburg, Mr. Russell seems to think nothing very serious would have happened to them. This is a position that would doubtless be received with a smile, if not more, were it not for the writer's eminent position in the world of philosophic thought. As the present war is so largely productive of discussions, this also will interest those who have tried to formulate an ethical theory of the contest. Mr. Russell writes:

"We can not destroy Germany even by a complete military victory, nor, conversely, could Germany destroy England even if our navy were sunk and London occupied by the Prussians. English civilization, the English language, English manufactures, would still exist, and as a matter of practical politics it would be totally impossible for Germany to establish a tyranny in this country. If the Germans, instead of being resisted by force of arms, had been passively permitted to establish themselves wherever they pleased, the halo of glory and courage surrounding the brutality of military success would have been absent, and public opinion in Germany itself would have rendered any oppression impossible. The history of our own dealings with our colonies affords abundant examples to show that under such circumstances the refusal of self-government is not possible. In a word, it is the means of repelling hostile aggression which make hostile aggression disastrous and which generate the fear by which hostile nations come to think aggression justified. As between civilized nations, therefore, non-resistance would seem not only a distant religious ideal, but the course of practical wisdom. Only pride and fear stand in the way of its adoption. But the pride of military glory might be overcome by a nobler pride, and the fear might be overcome by a clearer realization of the solidity and indestructibility of a modern civilized nation."

To a writer in The Westminster Gazette (London) this seems "indeed the faith that removes mountains." He imagines Mr. Russell assuming that "no nation would ever be aggressive if it were not in a state of unreasoning panic about the precautions of its neighbors." This writer is even more vehement:

"I submit that there is obviously something wrong with a philosophy which comes into this violent collision with the facts of history as commonly conceived, and with the natural human instincts of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand human beings. The idea that non-resistance would cure aggression is a speculation of a highly mystical order, which gets no countenance from history or experience. Liberty has never been won without conflict or kept by those who were unwilling to defend it at the cost of their lives. We may be sure that a people which was unwilling to resist an invader would be quite unable to win self-government from a conqueror. If the Germans came unopposed to London, we should, like the people of Alsace-Lorraine, pass under the dominion of Prussian bureaucrats, who have so far shown no sign of learning from us the lesson of granting autonomy to their possessions. Mr. Russell's idea that conquest is only made disastrous by the resistance which causes it to be accompanied by loss of life or destruction of property is to my mind utterly unethical. Conquest, in the view of normal men, is a disaster per se, which far transcends the acts of violence by which it may be accomplished. For it destroys the human relations, traditions, and loyalties, which normal men count most precious, and establishes relations of subjection and servility, which they most detest.

"It is idle to say that the substitution of German for British control of the British Empire would be compatible with the continuance of the English language, English self-government, or English mercantile prosperity. It might or might not be, and in all probability would only be, if the English, after being conquered, recovered enough strength to fight their conquerors for these privileges. But, unquestionably it would have profound and far-reaching effects, and all of them, from the English point of view, in the last degree calamitous.

"Thus, while Mr. Russell calls his article 'The Ethics of War,' his analysis is most defective on its ethical side. To get to the ethical roots of the matter we must begin by acknowledging that there are certain things for which men care more than they care for lives. This is the guiding motive of wars for principles and wars for self-defense, and even though moral standards vary and the principles of one generation may seem superstitious to the next, that is still the greatest fact about human nature, and it must be rated as of the highest ethical value. We shall make no progress in this analysis until we realize how far this ideal element enters into war. It is not the pride of military glory which makes men fight for their soil, or their homes, or resist a tyranny in arms, but affection, loyalty, and a sense of human worth and dignity. There is no 'nobler pride' which will 'overcome' these emotions, and the idea that modern nations, any more than ancient or medieval, will prove indestructible without them is an illusion.

"If we want to get rid of war, and to find some more rational way of litigating human differences, we must begin by recognizing the reality and high value of all these emotions, and we must throw the blame on the aggressor who violates them, and not on the victim who resists him. The contrary process, which lets hostile aggression go free and saddles its victim with the disasters of war, inverts all the ethical standards and throws us on a hopelessly false track. Ultimately, this line of reasoning leads to abolishing the police and letting burglars have the run of our houses, in the hope that their hearts may be softened by witnessing the helplessness of the victims. It is, in fact, philosophical anarchism, and as fatal to any law and justice resting on force in civil life as to the use of force between nations."

Another opponent of Mr. Russell's theories is Prof. Ralph Barton Perry of Harvard, who takes up and controverts one after another of Mr. Russell's specific opinions, and yet gives his assent to Mr. Russell's general and underlying opinion that "the way of mercy is the way of happiness for all."

"This opinion is abundantly verified by human experience, past and present, and is rapidly coming to be a common premise from which all philosophically-minded persons argue. War is an unmitigated calamity. It is not to be praised, but denounced; it is not even to be tolerated and idealized as a natural necessity, but is rather to be hunted to its sources and eradicated like a loathsome and destructive disease. . . . There is a curious inversion of emphasis in Mr. Russell's article. It is not impossible that a distrust of vulgar opinion should lead a nicely analytical and cautiously reflective mind to exaggerate whatever is contrary to the general prejudice. It may even lead one to dwell at length upon the immoderate indignation of the victim, while the fury of the assailant rages unrebuked. Side-Wise.

The newest shoes or rather boots are laced upon the side. There is no concealing the shoes—all of them—with the new short skirts so we may as well concede that footwear is one of the truly important articles of dress just now. The side laced boots will look well upon perfect and very slender feet.

For Milady's Wardrobe.

Very cool, simple waists are made of white voile, with hemstitching and tucks for their only ornament.

Add a gathered flounce to the overtunic of last year's frock and you will have a fashionable skirt.

Paris has by no means discarded beads; in fact, they appear on both evening frocks and straw hats.

Summer wraps are varied and so picturesque that one cannot plan a complete wardrobe without one.

Nothing is more trim than the sailor suits as seen abroad, with short, full skirts and high Russian boots.

Add a sheer net or chiffon guimpe to the evening frock and you will have a dinner or theater dress in good taste.

Some of the June bridesmaids will carry muffs instead of flowers. The muffs are dainty, airy affairs of tulle and silk.

White collars and cuffs are so perishable for the children's dresses! Why not make them of a contrasting color in linen?

A soft gray-blue called bleu soldat is the latest of the military colors. It is especially popular for the Zouave jackets.

A charming hat of leghorn is lined with cherry-colored chiffon. In the back the brim is lifted by a rose placed beneath it.

The woman who will spend her summer in the country or mountains can hardly dare to omit the sweater of brilliant color.

MR. COMMISSIONER.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

In the waning moments of our unmourned Assembly, the solons sought to put across a few more commissions and inspectorships—mainly with the intent and purpose of furnishing perches on which Progressive politicians might light.

The Governor has a bread line which trickles over the State boundary, but there is always a new face at the door in which the mixed emotions of hunger and thirst are fighting for the mastery. In a government by commission, of commission and for a commission, an army of places is necessary, and so the administration creates them in a mood calmly defiant of the cost.

Money is made to be spent, and if there isn't any money left in the treasury we'll make some more. The Governor's idea of a pleasant time would be to take over the San Francisco Mint as a State institution and run it in three shifts in order to keep the push upholstered with rhino.

Failing in this, the people must stand the shock in their tax bills. There can be no hint or suggestion of economy. Easy come and easy go is the only financial policy known to those who are dominating our otherwise fair and beloved State.

So there are commissioners of all kinds, and for all purposes, their duties ranging all the way from regulating the affairs of a billion-dollar corporation down to measuring the length of sheets in hotel beds. On the last day of the Assembly an effort was made to create a commission to regulate and license chiropractics. Some of the solons were not sure whether it was intended to control corn doctors or copyists, and others voted for it on the theory that any school of medicine that doesn't use calomel and the saw ought to be thoroughly investigated by a galaxy of expensive politicians. One must be a Johnson Progressive—whatever that is—in order to develop a $4000 nose for sniffing trouble.

Glory be to the machine! We now have a poultry commission—a hen bureau. We have had pleasant dreams and airy jests about chicken inspectors, but it has been reserved for the legislators of the palpitating commonwealth of California to bring them into real life. Whether they will operate on Broadway, at the Hippodrome, or at the public market is matter to be adjusted later, but certainly the politician who is to give the broilers the once over will be much envied. Whether it is a matter of pink tights or pin feathers, it is pleasant occupation just the same. It is almost worth while voting for Johnson if one is assigned to review the chicken parade at $300 a month. Heaven offers some magnificent prospects, but heaps of improvident men will insist that it has no edge over the job of broiler inspector in sweet Los Angeles.

Nor are the guardianships confined to the chickens.

We are also to have a brand new fish commission. We have not yet seen a copy of the measure enacted and so do not know whether it concerns the loan sharks or the suckers that go to San Francisco. Possibly it is to see that Bernal Dyas does not exceed the speed limit for mountain trout. Certainly the fish commission will do business on a large scale.

When the commissioners are on duty the herring will not dare jump up and bite people on the Redondo pier. It is a part of the business of the commission to regulate prices at which fish may be sold, and also to see that none that are overripe are allowed to linger on the market. This latter is not a pleasing job. An inspector might wear a clothespin over his beak and if the perfume broke through that he could make signs for the dealer to take out his catch and bury it.

But it is gratifying to know that we are no longer a State without a fish commission. When the bass are not biting we will know whom to blame.

We are also to have another keen-nosed group known as the sanitary commission, whose duties presumably are to see that our plumbing is put in straight and that we do not raise frogs in the cellar. Some union plumber who has a bunch of votes in sight draws down some $4000 a year for this savory job.

There are quite a raft of other commissions and inspectorships and it will be several weeks before we will be able to grasp the fine points of them all. But we can at least understand that the motto and watchword of the administration is: Government of commission, by commission, and for a commission, shall not perish from this earth.

CHURCHMEN, EDUCATORS.

Capt. John A. Beattie, a chaplain ing a Canadian regiment which is fighting for Engind in France, whose wife and son were lost on the Lusitania, declared last week that he would shed the cloth of the clergy and go into the trenches to fight the Germans. "I was a cowboy for twenty-five years on the plains of Canada and I can shoot the buttons off a man's coat at 100 yards," said Capt. Beattie. "When I came to England I had no intention of using my marksmanship against the enemy, but now with my revolver I will consider it my duty to kill as many Germans as they killed in the sinking of the Lusitania."

Prof. Leslie Cleveland McNemar of the Department of Political Science at George Washington University has been elected secretary of the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Prof. McNemar is faculty director of athletics at George Washington, and ever since his connection with the institution he has taken an active interest in student affairs.

The first Carnegie research fellowship of the iron and steel institute of London to be granted in the United States in two years has been awarded to Thomas G. Thompson, a teaching fellow in the department of chemistry in the University of Washington. The fellowship carries $500. The research work is to be done on the protection of iron and steel from corrosion by the passivifying factors. Mr. Thompson will carry on his experiments in the University of Washington laboratories. The obtaining of this fellowship makes Mr. Thompson eligible for the Carnegie gold medal for scientific research. Mr. Thompson is a graduate of Clark University, Worcester.

James W. Gidley, assistant curator of paleontology in the National Museum, is just back from an excavating expedition in the ancient deposits in the railroad cut near Cumberland, Md., bringing with him as an interesting find a piece of the broken jawbone of a prehistoric cat, whose species is now extinct, and whose age is about 150,000 years.

Oxford University has elected Dr. James M. Baldwin, honorary professor of the University of Mexico, and formerly professor of science in Toronto, Princeton and Johns Hopkins universities, to be Herbert Spencer lecturere for the year 1915-1916.

The Rev. Frank Hartl of Chicago, who created a stir at the Methodist ministers' meeting on Monday, when he was reported to have called President Wilson a "sissy" at a meeting two weeks previous, explains that he was under strong provocation, and his remark was intended more for Secretary of State Bryan than for President Wilson. He says: "I was full of disgust at the doings of our Hon. William Jennings Bryan, who travels over the country lecturing and carrying temperance pledges with him, urging people to sign them."

CARNEGIE FOUNDATION'S VALUE

Being Entirely Independent of Politics It Can Talk Right Out Regarding Weak Educational Matters.

[Henry S. Pritchett in North American Review:] The charge that the Carnegie Foundation has imposed upon the colleges and universities arbitrary standards is perhaps the one concerning which the most widespread misapprehension exists. College standards used in this sense refer not to those ideals of life and conduct which colleges seek to inspire, but to those objective tests which all colleges must maintain in order to carry on their work, such, for example, as the standards for admission and standards of examinations for promotion. With the fixing of such standards the Carnegie Foundation has little to do. These are set up and administered by the college faculties or by the various boards conducted by college faculties. The most that the Foundation can do is to bring such matters into the light. Above all, it has urged that such entrance standards be reasonable, that they be made with due regard to the high schools, and that they be honest. The Foundation has never attempted to dictate to any college what its standards of admission ought to be. It has not, however, hesitated to call attention to the wide discrepancy which has often existed between the standards laid down in the catalogue and those used in practice. The only standardu that the Foundation has urged upon institutions of learning have been those of common honesty and sincerity. . . .

The fear lest a central agency dealing with education might interfere with the independent life of institutions has been voiced by more than one university president. As the argument has been generally stated, it runs like this: The universities have hitherto led their lives independently. There is here introduced an agency which through its various activities is likely to interfere with this independent life. . . .

There is just one reason why a governmental agency cannot at this time report critically on colleges and State systems of education. That reason everybody knows. It is politics. Every governmental bureau, including that of education, is politically governed. No commissioner of education could hold office permanently who undertook to tell the facts about education in the various States—in such a report, for example, as that of the Foundation's studies on medical education recently published, or that on legal education about to appear. It was tried a few years ago. A report was prepared in the Bureau of Education, making straightforward comparisons between educational institutions of certain classes in the various States. The moment the nature of its contents became known, the local institutions in many States appealed to their Congressmen and Senators, and they in turn to the President. The report was suppressed. It reposes peacefully upon the shelves of the bureau. There it will continue to repose. And this situation will last just as long as the office of Commissioner of Education is subject to political pressure. Furthermore, the brethren who have recently been loudest in advocating a scrutiny by the Commissioner of Education, rather than that of the educational foundations, are the very ones who will appeal to their Senators and Representatives first if that scrutiny is made effective. This is the reason why an agency privately endowed, whose trustees represent the whole country, while it cannot take the place of a national bureau of education, can do certain work which at this time a government bureau cannot do.

TYPEWRITING IN CHINESE.

Machine Developed Upon Which Forty Words a Minute May be Written by an Expert Operator.

[Washington Post:] The first Chinese typewriter has been invented by a student in New York University, Heuen Chi. It makes 4200 characters. The inventor believes that with practice a speed of forty words a minute may be obtained—which is quite good for Chinese.

The machine has only three keys. One is a back spacer, another the space key and the third the key with which all the 4200 characters used are struck. The characters are made up of combinations of "radicals" or base characters. There are about 50,000 possible combinations.

Heuen Chi, the inventor, conceived the idea that a typewriter could be made to write Chinese while he was at his home in Southern China three years ago. He began a study of the Chinese dictionary to isolate the "radical" or base characters of the words. In most cases one character represents a whole word in Chinese, though thousands of these characters are made up of simpler characters which alone represent words themselves.

Coming here as a government student after a period in London University, Heuen Chi has continued work on his invention, which has been patented in Japan as well as China. It writes Japanese, too.

Consul-General Y. Y. Yang of this city wrote the first letter on the machine. It was addressed to the Chinese Minister in Washington and contained approximately 100 words. It took two hours to write, but the inventor said this slow speed was due to the unfamiliarity of the operator with the characters.

The model of the Chinese typewriter consists of two cylinders, five inches in diameter and about ten inches long, one of which slides on a base similar to that of the ordinary typewriter. On one of the cylinders is a copper plate containing the 4200 minute characters, which the machine prints. The other contains a paper copy of the same characters and is used as a guide to the location of each character. The operator turns the copper cylinder until the desired character is in front of the key, then he hits the key and the character is printed, after which the turning process is gone through again.

FIND PREHISTORIC OYSTERS.

Shells of Species Now Extinct Taken from a Well Drilled Two Thousand Feet Deep.

[Washington Star:] Prehistoric oysters, which flourished on the bottom of the sea when the Atlantic Ocean covered the present site of Charleston, S. C., and probably extended for nearly a hundred miles farther inland, were discovered far down in the earth when a well 2000 feet deep was recently drilled there, according to a report published by the Geological Survey. The engineer in charge of the drilling operations saved a complete set of samples of the materials penetrated and sent them to the office of the Geological Survey.

"One of the interesting results of these studies," says the survey, "was the finding of the shells of oysters and other marine organisms even down to the very bottom of the well, all of which, except those found within seventy-five or eighty feet of the surface, belong to species which lived during past ages and are now extinct.

"The shell of one species belonging to the oyster family, and known to scientists as "Exogyra upatroiensis stephenson,' was floated out from the bottom of the well by the natural flow of water. The story which the shell tells is an interesting one to students of earth history.

"When the oyster was alive the Atlantic Ocean covered the present site of Charleston and probably extended for nearly a hundred miles farther inland, but the bottom of the sea on which it lived was probably not more than fifty or 100 fathoms deep. The rivers from the land carried sand and mud into the sea and gradually filled it, but as the filling progressed the sea bottom slowly sank. Sometimes there was a pause in the sinking, and at other times there were even upward movements which temporarily lifted the sea floor entirely out of the water; but in the main the movements were downward until a relatively prehistoric time, when an upward movement caused the strand line to retreat to its present position."

For Only a Dime.

[New York Times:] Mrs. Beaton was walking through the park recently when two ragged, dirty little boys, who were playing nearby, stopped her.

"Say, lady," called out the elder of the two, "me kid brudder does fine imitatin' stunts. Give him a dime an' he will imitate a chicken for youse."

"What will he do—crow?" queried Mrs. Beaton.

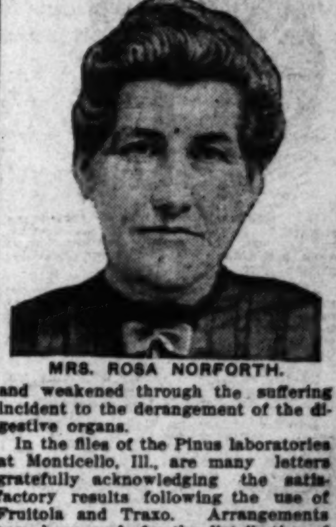
"Naw," replied the boy, "no cheap imitations like dat, ma'am. He'll eat a worm!"

Glad to Recommend Fruitola and Traxo

Mrs. Norforth Says She Suffered with Gall-stones for Several Years Without Relief.

In a letter to the Pinus laboratories, Mrs. Rosa Norforth, Monticello, Ills., says: "I cannot praise Fruitola and Traxo too highly as I consider it saved my life. I suffered with gall-stones for several years and could not get any relief until your preparation was recommended to me. It has been six months since I took the last bottle and I feel that I am entirely well. Have anyone doubting the merit of your preparation write me as I will be only too glad to recommend Fruitola and Traxo to anyone suffering from gall-stones."

Fruitola and Traxo are the names used to identify two preparations that are taken in combination. Fruitola acts on the intestinal organs as a powerful lubricant, softening congested masses and disintegrating the hardened particles that cause so much suffering, and expelling the accumulation with almost instant relief. Traxo is a splendid tonic, acting on the liver and stomach with most beneficial results and is recommended in connection with Fruitola to build up and restore the system that has become run down and weakened through the suffering incident to the derangement of the digestive organs.



MRS. ROSA NORFORTH.

In the files of the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., are many letters gratefully acknowledging the satisfactory results following the use of Fruitola and Traxo. Arrangements have been made for the distribution of these excellent remedies by leading drug stores everywhere. In Los Angeles Fruitola and Traxo can be obtained at the stores of The Owl Drug Co.

Skirts "$1.95 for the Making"---First Time in Months

—Just in! More of those splendid

Linen Handkerchiefs 10c

—"Good enough to use, cheap enough to lose"—

—This time with new style initials—and all the most wanted initials—so that those who have been waiting may buy them, Monday—10c or $1.15 dozen—

—So splendid for every day and vacation use—Many buy more than a dozen at a time—It's a good plan to buy a year's supply—at $1.15 dozen—At Bullock's—1st floor.

63x63 in. All Linen Pattern Cloths at . . $1.75

—Grass bleached to a snowy whiteness—the favorite Fleur de Lis pattern—Cloths of quality at a very low price—$1.75.

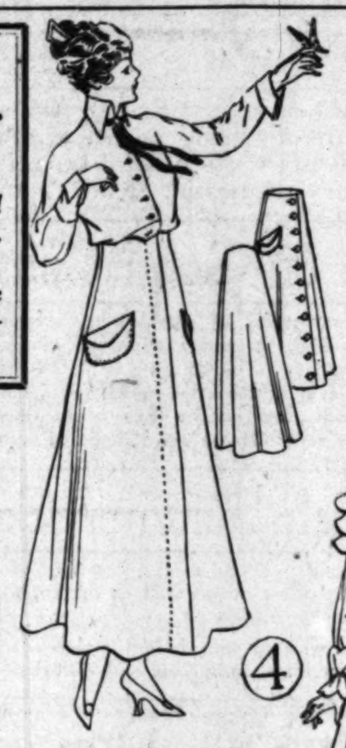
—An unusual offering—but don't try to guess how unusual—Just come to Bullock's, Monday, to see the cloths—but come prepared to buy—

95 Round Scalloped Cloths at $3.95

—Size 70x70 inches—satin damask of Irish manufacture—snow white—floral circular patterns—Just 95 of them at $3.95, Monday, in The Linen Store.

"Half Dozens" Napkins, $1.05 to $3.50

—"Half dozens"—means very low prices—an adjustment of linen napkins that means profit to users. At Bullock's, "The Linen Store," 2nd floor.



—See Bullock's Big Basement Store News, another Page, This Paper.

—that Bullock's has announced the making of skirts. It is a question if ever a Bullock skirt-making announcement was more fraught with meaning and opportunity.

—Women should read this news and then appreciate it—Take from it all the importance that it contains—"$1.95 for the making"—No extras—

—"Just choose your material from any woolen at $1.00 a yard or more"

—that is in this splendid stock of Summer Woolens at Bullock's—and Bullock's man tailor will make you a skirt to your measure—"$1.95 for the making"—Complete.

—See pictures—4 of the styles.

—"We're going to make a record, we're going to set a standard, win friends, Build Business. You should let every woman in Los Angeles know of this event on Monday—"

—That's what this advertisement is for—and yet it will fall far short of covering the ground it should—

—When you consider that

—Bullock-made skirts have ever been "different."

—That Bullock-made skirts have ever been rich in style and individuality.

—That Bullock-made skirts express the personality of a master tailor according to the ideas of Bullock's.

—That Bullock-made skirts do fit and satisfy fashion as well as their wearers.

—And that these Bullock-made skirts at "$1.95 for the making" are to set a standard, and make a record—You will understand their merit——Plan to order your new skirt at Bullock's, Monday—It is barely possible that we may be compelled to limit the orders we can take. Tell your friends. Be early—At Bullock's, 2nd floor.

—New, for afternoon or evening wear—an inexpensive gift for the Girl Graduate—

New Crystal Hair Ornaments

—rather hard to describe—these "different" ornaments of Crystal that are set with sapphires, silver inlaid and other effects—

—Hair Ornaments for afternoon or evening wear in different shapes—the Casque—Bow Knot—Feather and Loop effect—

—Very acceptable gifts for the Girl Graduate, yet are very inexpensive—
$1.00. First Floor.

New Silks That Are Superb

—One might paint them if one had magic in the brush—but advertising can be merely a suggestion and an invitation to you to come and see them Monday.

—Really, to "keep in touch"—one should make it a point to visit this Silk Store at Bullock's frequently. It is so different. Today, it's new—Tomorrow, it's new again—and day after tomorrow—New! New! New! The kaleidoscopic brillance of Fashion is reflected splendidly—and then there are the values—It's so easy to miss those one most desires to share. Like this Splendid 36 in. Silk Failles at $1.75 Yd.

—A beautiful fine Cord Faille Silk—that is just as rich as it can be—Solid colors—the new shades of Purple, Wistaria, Navy, Rose, Army Blue and Green—Don't fail to see it, Monday, at $1.75.

A 35 in. Chiffon Taffeta, Colored, $1.00

—Another very important silk because of its quality—a soft, fine Taffeta—in a rare line of colors, including Oregon Green, Navy, Sand, Cerise, Wistaria, Maise, Lavender, Pink, White, Ivory and Black—at $1.00 yard.

27 in. Motora Pongee $1.00

—A very heavy all silk pongee—for motor coats—25 pieces, much under worth at $1 yd.

—Satin Stripe Taffetas $2.00

—The new novelty taffetas—changeable, with wide satin stripes—beautiful 36 inch silks $2 yd.

—"3100 yards—Let's make an advertisement of them—Let's mark them all at 15c yard"—

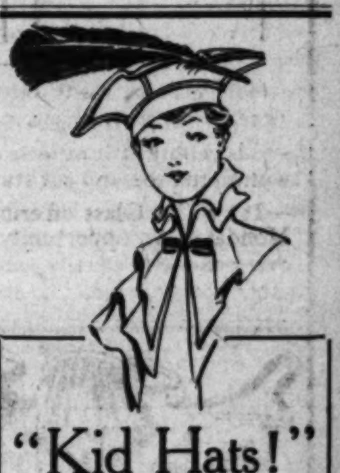
So 3100 Yards Dress Cottons to Startle You 15c yd.

—That's the story in short—of an opportunity women will hurry to share, Monday.

—It's perfectly ridiculous to mark such Cottons as these at such a very low price—no matter if they are short lines—Just think of it—

Renfrew Devonshire Cloth
Floral Windsor Crepe
Plain Colored Ratine
Plain and Fancy New Cloth
Embroidered Colored Crepe
Silk Mixed Floral Crepe
Imported Scotch Ginghams
Tissues and Striped Poplins

—Weaves that you couldn't think of approaching in a regular way at 15c—and as desirable as though they were regular price—but in short lines. A wide range of colors and effects—Away they go—15c—on Monday. This means "Hurry!" 2nd floor.



"Kid Hats!"

—Yes, indeed—"S, il Vous Plait"—

—Kid Hats—as well as kid gloves—the late Summer edict of Fashion.

—Kid Tam O'Shanters—

—Just as clever as they can be—Cool—comfortable—and—

—"Style!"—Well, just see them for yourself on Monday—

—Snow white — bewitching, coquettish—

—Jaunty—sparkling as a dancing wave on a sunshiny morning.

—Round — 4-cornered — with double ruffles—

—Some look as though puffed between cords that extend from center of crown to simple band—

—Some have large silk tassels—

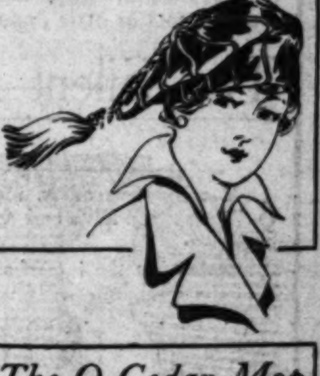
—Others with Owl heads—

—Then there are military gray kid cocked hats (like an admiral's) with buttons and Paradise. (Ideal with the new check suits.)

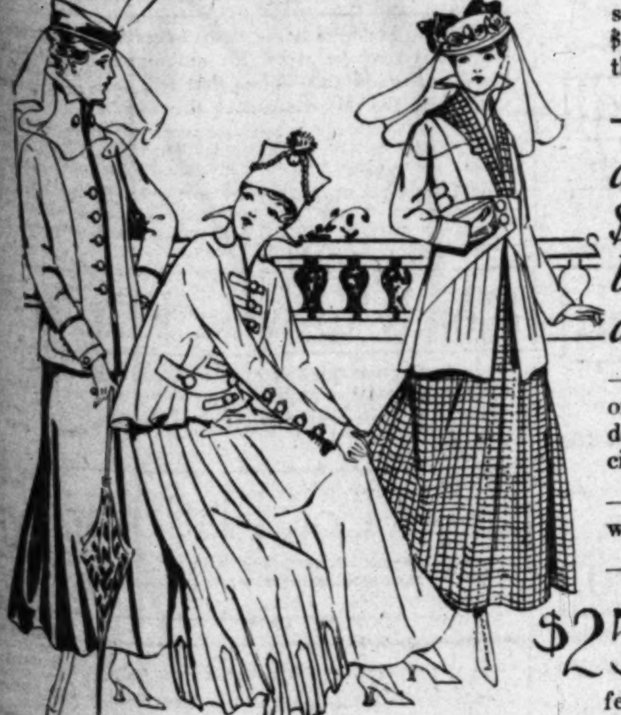
—And corduroy tams to wear with corduroy suit or sweater and for traveling.

It is "New Hats"

—At Bullock's—And to see the new hats at their best in the rare variety of style and shape and color—you should visit Bullock's on Monday—Third Floor.



Oh! They're Splendid---These Suits That Are to Be Sold Monday at $18.75 and $25.00



—It's a question which price deserves most emphasis—Both merit so much—there are a few more Suits at $25 than at $18.75—but the $18.75 Suits are as extremely worth while and unusual at $18.75 as the Suits at $25 are unusual at $25.00—

—and the reason why Bullock's is able to offer them at $18.75 and at $25—is the great regular suit business that Bullock's has been doing—

—for this great regular business at Bullock's—means great regular orders with suit manufacturers—and great regular orders have a deal to do with securing enthusiastic support when one desires special interest from manufacturers—

—Especially special interest of such a superlative nature as that which made possible such suits as these to sell at $18.75 and $25.00.

—Listen! they're as worthy regular markings as any suits we have known this year. It's a favor to own them — a privilege to offer them—an opportunity no woman in Los Angeles should overlook—

The society leader begins to suspect her husband.

[illegible] years of the exacting society of her set had not helped [illegible] Willard Fall reach the age of [illegible]. Her unusual fitness for [illegible], whether snapping the whip [illegible] four-in-hand tallyhos, or ar[illegible] the intricate detail of a successful afternoon lawn party, had set [illegible] in the position she'd occupy [illegible] general guardian of society's [illegible] and precluded any possibility [illegible] piling up her years gracefully [illegible] might be left for those who [illegible] born the glory of the game, [illegible] determining influence of its [illegible]

[illegible] of the beauty that comes from [illegible] simplicity; a belief in [illegible] and a high aspiring ideal[illegible] hope to thrive, she knew, [illegible] hothouse of fascination known [illegible]. Prematurely wise, she had [illegible] first abandoned the hope of [illegible] the half-way station in child[illegible], and had instead de[illegible] her energy and intelligence to a [illegible] watch over the transgressions [illegible] careful associates. Quiet, [illegible] well poised, she hid under [illegible] of her inscrutable face the [illegible] of many a slight derelic[illegible] of some few members of her set. [illegible] their self-appointed guardian, [illegible] long experience as buffer be[illegible] the spicy scandal of society and [illegible] gossip of mongers outside it [illegible] agility, if not grace.

The girl she recognized in a flash to be Laura Evans, a rich young debutante, fresh from school, gay with the gaiety of her first season out, highly impressionable, and tremendously attractive. Rising from her chair, she stepped cautiously, but with nervous springy steps to the window, where with narrowed eyes, and lips tightly compressed, she watched for a moment their animated faces, and noted that her hand, given at greeting, was still in his. Then turning angrily, and with swift decision, she crossed to the table, and pressed nervously many times on the bell summoning her maid. A moment later, her maid entered. Pointing out through the window at the engrossed couple and with a voice calculated not to arose a servant's ever ready suspicions, she said:

"Will you tell Mr. Fall, please, that Mrs. Fall would like to see him at once?"

"Very well, m'am."

"And, Janet—quietly, and courteoutly, please."

His wife, watching his every move, and timing his appearance in the library to the second, waited tensely for him to enter. He came, nonchalantly removing his hat, and carelessly affecting not to notice her set jaw and blazing eyes, asked her, "What's it you wish, dear?"

"Willard Fall, for the last time I warn you that I will not tolerate your open attentions to other women." That was all, but he became aware in those few words, of a thousand others left unspoken. He knew that this was no time for an avowal of faith and affection; also he realized that her feelings couldn't be played on by his acting the part of injured innocence; so, assuming the air of one who has been caught in an act that means a great deal less than it appears to, he laughed an amused little laugh, slightly tempered by surprise, and said, "Why, how extraordinary of you, dear." She shuddered and worked her hands in impatience at that. He continued: "How altogether unusual. A perfectly harmless tete-a-tete on the sidewalk. Ha! Ha! Fancy, on the sidewalk, and in broad daylight, too. If your nerves are so upset, why don't you go to the country, and rest up a bit. These little meetings and social pleasantries of mine unduly upset you. They mean nothing, I assure you." She realized immediately the course he was adopting in trying to make light of what she, and all the world knew were unpardonable transgressions. But, so choked was she with the feeling her excitement made inexpressible, that she stood silent, her hands nervously clasping and unclasping, her eyes crying out the agony that her lips could not utter. He took advantage of her silence, and, with a slight shrug of his shoulders and a look of less concern than he felt, he adjusted his hat, and in a moment was gone, leaving her standing, silently confused, and again beaten by the muteness of her own emotions.

II.

The Norrisses were, in a casual, unintimate way, friends of the Falls. Ray Norris's law office faced Willard Fall's engineering office directly across the court of the same skyscraper in the city. The two young men had become acquainted through their business proximity, invitations had been extended, calls exchanged, and the two families were in a fair way of becoming friends.

Ray Norris was a prosperous young attorney, clean cut, handsome, ambitious, and tenderly devoted to his wife. She was a good-looking young woman of 22 or thereabouts, fresh as an April morning, dark-eyed, and with a bewitching, elusive smile ever lingering about the corners of her adorable red lips. If her husband was tenderly devoted to her, she was infinitely devoted to him, and set him up on a pedestal to be idolized for all time.

They stood on the porch of their handsome new house, bathed in the warm morning sun, he dressed for business, and she in a fetching pale-blue morning gown, that so well set off her flashing dark eyes and abundant crisp black hair.

THE UNCHLOROFORMED.

Rev. James A. Porter of Rich Hill, Mo., is claimed by people there to be the oldest minister in point of service in that State. He is in his ninetieth year, and was ordained to preach in 1848. He has been a member of the St. Louis M. E. conference for forty-two years.

Mrs. Edward Conklin, 101 years old, the oldest person living in the Green Paint district of Brooklyn, N. Y., was recently given an automobile ride through Long Island City, across the Queensboro bridge, through Broadway, N. Y., to the Pennsylvania Railroad station. This was her first ride in an automobile, and the second time she had been to Manhattan since 1865.

Isaac Prince of Barnard celebrated his 100th birthday by attending a picnic.

Mrs. Caroline Shaw, born November 15, 1822; Mrs. Lee R. Aker, born November 15, 1953, and Carl Aker, born November 13, 1880, grandmother, mother and son, celebrated their birthday recently at Smithville.

Mrs. J. L. D. Morrison of St. Louis, 74 years of age, who has been known as arbiter of the city society for many years, has entered in the Saturday course given at Washington University.

William F. Perrin of Platte county, 95 years old, is still hale and hearty. Mr. Perrin was never shaved by a barber. He still shaves himself with a razor he purchased seventy-five years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Nutt of Clinton, recently celebrated the seventieth anniversary of their marriage with their children, grandchildren and relatives. Mr. Nutt is 90 and Mrs. Nutt 89 years old.

Things to Remember

ACCORDING to John Locke, English philosopher, "A sound mind in a sound body" is a short but a full description of a happy state in this world.

Happy people do not have toothache.

Wise people visit the dentist regularly and train their children to do likewise.

The average mouth is the most filthy part of the body.

Brushing, silk ligature and massage are now as necessary (to the teeth and gums) as clothing to our person.

This takes the place of friction, caused by eating coarse and uncooked foods in primitive times, which automatically cleaned the teeth and hardened the gums.

We teach people how to prevent decay of the teeth and keep the gums healthy.

DR. HOMER
636 SOUTH BROADWAY
ORPHEUM THEATRE BLDG.

Bad breath, bad taste in mouth, bleeding or receding gums are symptoms of Pyorrhea, for which everyone should watch, because it may be too late when the teeth get loose.

Pyorrhea can be cured if taken in time.

Our specialty is treating Pyorrhea and making teeth without plates.

We make a full set of plateless teeth if you have two or more roots in either jaw.

This method of restoring missing teeth is applicable where ordinary bridge work cannot be used.

By our analgesic method, we can extract, crown, fill, or even remove a live nerve without pain.

Will Tell You How to—SAVE YOUR HAIR

It is the birthright of every man and woman to have thick, glossy, luxuriant hair.

IF YOUR SCALP ITCHES
IF YOU HAVE DANDRUFF
IF YOUR HAIR IS FADING
IF YOUR HAIR IS FALLING OUT
IF YOUR HAIR IS DRY AND BRITTLE

—the cause must be determined first; then it is a simple matter to effect a cure.

Prof. John H. Austin

Famous Bacteriologist, Hair and Scalp Specialist of Chicago, has had 35 years' experience in conditions of the hair and scalp. He will determine, by the use of a very powerful microscope, the precise nature of your hair troubles.

During the past four months Prof. Austin has made hundreds of free microscopic examinations of the hair and scalp of our patrons—they enthusiastically appreciate this free service, which is conducted in Professor Austin's private office, and women need not take down their hair.

Professor Austin will tell you, free of charge, just what to do to your hair to bring it back to a healthy condition. Both men and women invited.

ANCIENT TABLETS DECIPHERED.

Babylonian Records, the Oldest Writings Extant, Tell of Plagues of Locusts and Customs of Country.

[Philadelphia Record:] A number of ancient Sumarian tablets recording the deeds of the Babylonians thousands of years ago have been deciphered by George A. Barton at the University of Pennsylvania museum.

One of these tablets, which tells how a farmer rid his field of locusts and caterpillars, is dated 4000 B. C., and is the oldest piece of writing extant, according to an announcement made last night by officials of the museum.

The farmer, Dr. Barton's translation says, called in a necromancer who "broke a jar, cut open a sacrifice, a word of cursing he repeated, and the locusts and caterpillars fled." For this service he received a tall palm tree.

That a canal was constructed in Babylonia nearly 5000 years ago is shown by another tablet dated "the year the divine Naramin opened the mouth of the Canal Erin at Nippur."

Naram-Sin was a king in Babylonia, and is supposed to have financed the construction of the waterway which gave Nippur transportation facilities with the rest of the world.

A third tablet, dated 3200 B. C., records the transfer of land and a quantity of grain for bronze money. Gold and silver were known at that time, but were not used as currency. Other tablets of later dates show what is said to be the earliest information regarding slaves. Two merchants traded in slaves and hardware implements. One of their transactions, as translated by Dr. Barton, was the exchange of two slaves, a silversmith and a charioteer for two chariots.

THE WOMEN OF WAR.

They stay, unloved, in their saddened homes
And work and wonder and weep,
And things go on as they did before—
Children to feed and rooms to sweep.
And never a joy from the rise of the sun
Till the long, sad, weary day is done.
God pity the women of war!

They live, unloved, in their saddened homes
And hearken again and again
To the last farewell and the sound of drums
And the tread of the marching men.
But not till the sun dips into the sea
Is there respite from work and drudgery.
God help the women of war!

They weep, unloved, in their saddened homes
For their mates who marched away,
Some to return but battered wrecks;
Others have gone to stay.
Alas, for the thousand and one little schemes
They plotted and planned, awake and in dreams!
God pity the women of war!

They mourn, unloved, in their saddened homes,
Heartsick of the weary grind.
Who, now, will succor the helpless mates
And the kiddies left behind?
Gone every hope, gone every bliss,
No dear Daddy at night to kiss.
God pity the women of war!

They droop, unloved, in their saddened homes
And curse the direful day
That felled their men on the battlefield,
Their country's honor for pay.
It's the women of war who drink the cup
Of bitterness brewed by those higher up.
God help the women of war!
It's the women of war, not its makers, who must Pay the price of greed and anger and lust.
God damn the demons of war!

BOMBARDING VENICE.

BY TOM FITCH.

I READ in the press dispatches that Austrian warships are being mobilized for a dash to bombard Venice. Without violating that strict neutrality which I have preserved (at times) during the European war I nevertheless venture to hope that something will happen either to the Austrian conscience or the Austrian ships that will exempt from destruction Venice and its art treasures.

What a shame it would be for a twentieth-century nation to destroy the memorials of Venice in her prime, the Venice of history, the Venice of our dreams, the Venice of Titian, of the Doges, of the Ten; the Venice whose fleets were led by Doge Enrico Dandolo to the conquest of Constantinople; the Venice which held the subjugated East in her hand and rested her trophies against the breast of the Alps; the Venice adown whose sweet salt waters bright moons lit gliding gondolas and from the balconies of whose marble palaces radiant women leaned to drop lilies and roses upon plumed serenaders.

Neither neigh of horse, nor honk of auto, nor moo of cow, nor bleat of sheep or goat, nor yell of jitney driver, nor crow of rooster, nor cry of newsboy ever disturbs the sweet silence of Venetian streets, for the highways are waterways whose echoes are only wakened by the songs of gondoliers. If you wish to go from one part of Venice to another and have not a gondola of your own and have not a half-lira (10 cents) with which to pay your fare you must either stay where you are or swim.

There are some slight inconveniences attendant upon these otherwise admirable conditions. According to Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, high-class society in Venice is conducted on an anti-Mormon, polyandric basis. The lady must remain loyal to her marital vows until after the birth of a son and heir. Then she is at liberty to take a "cavalier serviente." He is the lieutenant-governor. He is the Eshleman of the household and officiates during the absence or inability of the husband. The lady is also permitted to have a "petito" who is a sort of president of the senate who officiates when the Eshleman is otherwise occupied. In other than high-browed society the invader of domestic felicity must—if he would escape unpleasant consequences—be a good swimmer.

Your vehicle in Venice is a smooth-gliding gondola and your chauffeur is its motive power. He harnesses himself to his paddle in the stern of the boat and is hidden from view by the little cubby house in the center of the gondola wherein the passengers sit on soft cushions. You cannot even hear the dip of his oar. You seem to be propelled by fair powers or wafted by the breath of Hesperus as you skim along the surface of the Grand Canal, the steel prow of your gondola flashing in the sunshine.

There are palaces—poems in marble—on either side of the canal. In one Canova lived and conceived his creations in stone. In another Byron sang to the stars. In still another Moore looked out upon singing gondoliers and sighing Strephons, and in the same house Fenimore Cooper composed the dreary drivel of "Leather Stocking" and the bombastic rhetoric of his good "Injin." Here is the Palace Morolin, where Christoforo Moro, alias Cassio, wooed the fair Desdemona and was cut out by an intelligent contraband named Othello. Across this canal is the arch of stone—the Rialto—where Signor Antonio was accustomed to make a spittoon of Shylock merely because the Hebrew charged 1 per cent. a day for carrying the longs on Adriatic Central on a falling market. At the end of the canal is the Doges' Palace, where Portia—the Clara S. Foltz of her age—got the best of Shylock and demurred him out of the pound of flesh to which he was justly entitled under a specific contract.

There is a patch of a few acres of land in Venice. It is the square of Saint Marks, where thousands of pigeons from the mainland flock every day to be fed by the city authorities. Here is the Palace of the Doges, five times destroyed by fire and five times rebuilt during the last ten centuries. It is one of the grandest repositories of art in Europe. Here are statues of Adam and Eve, and Neptune and Mars, and portraits of the seventy-odd Doges of Venice, some by Titian and some by Tintoretto. A black curtain over one of these portraits bears the inscription, "Hic locus est Marini Faletri, decapitali pro criminibus." Many Operations Avoided

WHILE of course there are serious cases of feminine ills that nothing but a surgical operation will remedy, the indisputable fact remains that hundreds of operations have been avoided by the wonderful medicinal virtue of

and the very best proof of this is the unsolicited and grateful letters of the recovered ones themselves. By special permission we publish here four of them out of hundreds we have:—

Louisville, Ky.—"I think if more suffering women would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound they would enjoy better health. I suffered from a female trouble, and the doctors decided I had a tumorous growth and would have to be operated upon, but I refused as I do not believe in operations. I had fainting spells, bloated, and could hardly stand the pain in my left side. My husband insisted that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so thankful I did, for I am now a well woman. I sleep better, do all my housework and take long walks. I never fail to praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my good health."—Mrs. J. M. Resch, 1900 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky.

Decatur, Ill.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. Laura A. Griswold, 2300 Blk. East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"My left side pained me so for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that they knew of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Griffith, 1568 Constant St., Cleveland, Ohio.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine.

Charlotte, N.C.—"I was in bad health for two years, with pains in both sides and was very nervous. I had a growth which the doctor said was a tumor, and I never would get well unless I had an operation. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I gladly say that I am now enjoying fine health."—Mrs. Rosa Sims, 16 Winona St., Charlotte, N.C.

It would seem wise before undergoing an operation to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.—All our testimonials are guaranteed to be genuine and truthful. They came to us entirely unsolicited and are sincere expressions of gratitude for actual benefits received from the medicine.—THE LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine, as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

BUSINESS WOMEN IN PARIS.

THE HONEY BEE. By Samuel Merwin. Illustrated by R. M. Crosby. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis.

MR. MERWIN has carried the art of story-telling to unusual heights in "The Honey Bee;" style with a charm to it unfolds the strange, human, experiences of Hilda Wilson, American business woman, during her nominal vacation in Paris.

"The Honey Bee is a novel of some 500 pages with the action compressed into a few months, but useless detail is largely eliminated, every situation has its inevitable influence in assisting Hilda to break through the conventional stage settings of life and get behind the scenes where men and women live, wickedly perhaps, but withal blamelessly.

Blink Moran, with whom she forms so close a friendship that it is necessary to refuse his offer of marriage, is rather an idealized type of pugilist; but, taking him as the author has made him, Blink is an admirable fellow, consistently drawn.

Hilda, Blink and Adele—the last is one of the American "Texas Twister" dancers—are plausibly drawn together over the cradle of a little, sick, illegitimate baby whose French mother is helpless in the hospital, and the association fuses into a close friendship.

Hilda regards life and all its affairs more or less as a business, somewhat analogous to the manner of running a department store; and, when "The Honey Bee" opens, the strict conventions are her rules in the business of life. But, psychologically, she is transformed when the story ends.

One by one those who try to "put over the proposition of marriage" fail, and in the end she voluntarily goes to the man from whom she has fled, a man who cannot take her as his wife. But high artistry sustains this, as every other, situation; nothing offends, we may say there seems to be little that is ethically wrong.

The description of the prize fight between Moran and the redoubtable Carpentier, the enthusiasm of the vulgar Mrs. Huybers, wife of Moran's manager, the bewildering emotions at conflict within Hilda as she watches, makes one of the most interesting passages in current fiction.

"FREE LOVE?"

FIDELITY. By Susan Caspell. Small, Maynard & Co., Boston.

IT'S AN anarchistic sort of fidelity which the author of "The Glory of the Conquered" delineates in her latest novel. Nothing violent at all—violence is only the means of getting propulsion into Utopia—but the real anarchistic, egocentric idea of doing as one fancies without regard to social conventions or traditional customs. Susan Gaspell may not believe in "free love," but she succeeds in making Ruth a far more attractive and admirable woman than those staid, Hymen-strapped women who, perhaps fearing her charm may be potent on their own husbands, treat her with orthodox bitterness.

And for the matter of that, Stuart Williams, married, who vanishes from the provincial New England town with Ruth, is himself, despite subsequent infidelities, the most interesting and pleasing man in the book excepting Dr. Franklin.

And Dr. Franklin, who alone of all the villagers retains and is not ashamed of his friendship with Ruth, pays scant attention to the protests of his bride, who, perhaps, has a premonition that "the shameless woman" may be something of a menace to her own happiness. At any rate, Amy's outraged sense of decency has no effect on her husband; and when Ruth returns to the village to be at the deathbed of her father, Dr. Franklin makes himself conspicuous in proselyting among former friends to get them to call on Ruth.

And the "free love" motive dominates the story like an orchestral boom when, after thirteen years of obduracy, Mrs. Williams consents to a divorce so her husband will be free to marry "that woman." Then it is that Ruth hoists the standard of her emancipation. Marriage! Why marriage? Ah, but Williams demands to know what people will say of him if they don't get married now that they can? Marriage for Ruth? Not so. Besides, Dr. Franklin's letters intimate that his young wife does not fill his life as a woman should.

"Fidelity" is a novel with considerable artistry in it; especially good are the chapters presenting the return of Ruth to the village and her suffering at being pariah among former friends. But "Fidelity" as an argument for anarchistic love—it is unquestionably gratifying if one is predisposed to that sort of thing.

JACK LONDON'S LATEST.

THE SCARLET PLAGUE. By Jack London. The Macmillan Company, New York.

IT IS saying a whole lot to call "The Scarlet Plague" perhaps the poorest, cheapest, most inconsequential and least pleasing piece of work from the point of artistry or entertainment that Jack London has ever done. The shortness of the novel is one redeeming feature; all the other features indicate the hastily constructed potboiler, made from the remnants of such London ideas as have more or less vitalized other books.

Some sixty years after the world has been more than decimated by the "scarlet plague," but a few score people remain on the Pacific Coast and these are rapidly reverting to barbarism.

This plague swept with incredible swiftness around the world; whole cities were devastated within a few days, and terrible scenes of rioting and violence followed the breaking down of civilization, but in the end there were only a handful of survivors, among them a young professor of literature at Berkeley, who, as a withered old man, dressed in skins, relates the story.

All of Mr. London's pet and pampered hobbies are ridden through the story, which one may finish easily in ninety minutes. We glimpse the brutal chauffeur—the London cave man—who has taken for his mate the refined daughter of the nation's greatest magnate; we have the talk of wage-slaves dinned in our ears; we see the sprouting of religious superstition which allows medicine men, and later preachers and priests, to batten on the labor of their cringing fellows; and we get a fragmentary depictment in the two grandchildren, who knock out teeth from a skull for ornaments, of the reversion to savagery.

"The Scarlet Plague" is a very good sample of the shoddy, scamped work that is sometimes, but not often, done by authors who are not scrupulous regarding the guarantee offered by their names on the title pages.

Patrick MacGill.

Whose new novel, "The Rat-Pit," deals with the courage and purity of an Irish peasant girl in adversity. Like his famous first book, "Children of the Dead End," his new story reflects the work-world which Mr. MacGill has known as navvy and wanderer. He here appears in the uniform of the London Irish regiment, in which he recently volunteered for the great war.

IMPRESSIONALISTIC REALISM.

THE BELOVED. By James Oppenheim. B. W. Huebsch, New York.

THE publishers are right in the little notice accompanying this novel: One likes it immensely or doesn't immensely. It is something new, yet typical of Mr. Oppenheim—one feels that he is straining to push through every conventional artistic limitation; his fretful, dynamic spirit is impatient of restrictions. He is something like a rocket, trying to get himself ignited and go zipping away with a series of repercussions that will send him beyond the moon.

"The Beloved" has some of the mannerism of Carlyle, a color or two that might have been taken off the palette of Zola and considerable of the soft idealism present in many youthful novels. The style is saltatory, situations are sketched with impressionalistic freedom; and, though there are passages brilliant and smashing, the book is a lachrymose romance pitched in an unusually shrill key.

"Devlin's" is a tenderloin "dump" and Mr. Oppenheim has put on the realism with a heavy hand. Ralph Hardy, a poet, pure and therefore inexperienced, drops in to take a look at "life" and is promptly annexed by Trixie, a young tiger-cat, casually connected with the moving pictures.

Trixie flays men in the melodramatic fashion that all youthful novelists impute to women who live by the highest paid unskilled labor; but she is amazed and angry to find that Ralph is not as other men. Contrition smites her an overwhelming blow; especially when Ralph earnestly proclaims an undying, unselfish love. He is very young and unsophisticated.

Accepting the author's premises, we are not inclined to quarrel with his conclusions; but the pathetic death which obviates testing Ralph's love in wedlock shows discernment on the author's part. One whose kisses and hand have been claimed so promiscuously could hardly wipe out all taste for sin as she wiped the rouge from her lips—but a combination of both good and bad fortune change her character and her position in the world.

"The Beloved" falls far short of what the manifest energy within it intended; the theme is almost as absurd as trying to grow an orchid in a garbage can; but there is sometimes a fine frenzy in the emotional stress, and no one can fairly accuse it of being flaccid.

A NAPOLEONIC FANTASY.

THE RETURN. By John Malmesbury Wright. Paul Elder & Co., San Francisco.

"THE RETURN" is a brief fantasy relating how Napoleon returns to France and places himself at the service of the country, but refuses to accept any other title or dignity than that of "Little Corporal."

Swiftly he places the troops, instructs the generals, forces the Germans back; and at last from the Imperial Throne at Berlin he speaks: "No more the Kaiser wears a crown. The people rule. People of Germany, soldiers of England, soldiers of France, my work is done. Farewell."

The book—very small though it is—is a beautiful piece of work, strikingly illustrated and artistically printed. The edition is limited to 500 copies.

SOCIAL CONQUESTS.

THE CLIMBER. By Amy D'Arcy Wetmore. The Norman Remington Co., Baltimore.

THE story of a social climber is always interesting to those who scorn such tactics as the climber must use—and yet there are few who don't, or wouldn't if they could, practice them.

"The Climber" is the diary of Mrs. J. William Brown, whose husband made millions out of a patent. She puts the "J" onto the name because it sounds well, and she longs to become known as "Mrs. Billy Brown."

POETRY.

THE BELGIAN BARD.

POEMS OF EMILE VERHAEREN. Selected and rendered into English by Alma Strettel. (Portrait of the author by John S. Sargent.) John Lane Company, New York.

THE translator modestly begs indulgence "for my failure adequately to render Verhaeren's peculiar and striking beauty of language" into English. But at that, these poems are exceptional in colorful expressions, vivid, unusual imagery; some have a passionate, rhythmic strength something alike to Shelley's, as this stanza from "Joy" shows:

"O splendid, spacious days, irradiate
With flaming dawns, when earth shows yet more fair
Her ardent beauty, proud without alloy;
And wakening life breathes out her perfume rare
So potently, that, all intoxicate,
Our ravished being rushes upon joy."

Emile Verhaeren, we are told in the introductory note, is "remarkable among the brilliant group of writers representing 'Young Belgium,' and one who has been recognized by the literary world as holding a foremost place among the lyric poets of the day."

His love of beauty is intense, but often he passes into sadness. These lines are from "The Grave Digger:"

"The ground is nothing but pits and cones,
Deep graves in every corner yawn;
The frost in the winter cracks the stones,
And when the summer in June is born
One hears, 'mid the silence that pants for breath,
The germinating and life of Death
Below, among the lifeless bones."

Perhaps the dominant characteristic of the verse is in the descriptive passages, of which "The Silence" is a notable example. These lines show something of the originality with which graphic, poetic description is given:

"All round about stand steeples straight as stakes,
And each its bell between its fingers shakes;
All round about, with their three-storied loads,
The teams prowl down the roads;

All round about, where'er the pine woods end,
The wheel creaks on along its rutty bed,
But not a sound is strong enough to rend
That space intense and dead."

HISTORY-BIOGRAPHY.

HUBERT HOWE BANCROFT.

HISTORY OF MEXICO. By Hubert Howe Bancroft. The Bancroft Company, New York.

INEVITABLY interest is drawn in this new, one-volume, popular edition of Mr. Bancroft's history to the concluding chapters in which the aged, but fully alert, historian reviews and comments with marked acerbity on the recent revolutions. His knowledge of Mexico and its people, the social and economic forces, is great; perhaps unequalled by any other man. Closely he has followed all developments during the recent years, and a scathing presentation of facts, forcefully disclosing the haphazard movements and policies, is made against the present administration at Washington.

He admits that Diaz may have been all that his enemies said of him; but nevertheless Diaz was the man who kept peace and developed Mexico, while all of the "prominent" revolutionists—Villa, Zapata, Carranza, Orozco and Huerta—are avaricious and brutal, and have failed to show the slightest executive qualities. All that is interesting, very interesting, in that it presents the views of the greatest historian of Mexico; but the value of this edition is in its able condensation of much included in the six volumes of Mr. Bancroft's standard "History of Mexico."

Though somewhat brevlated, this history is comprehensive. Satisfying attention is given the aboriginal people, their religion, government and civilization; the Spanish Conquest comprises one of the important parts of the book, and all of the important changes and developments from that day to current events are recorded. Mr. Bancroft says: "There are but two classes of society in Mexico, those who work to live and those who live by the labor of their fellow-man. . . . Between the two there is an almost impassable gulf," and points out how hopeless it is to expect Mexico to prosper without some strong, controlling, centralized authority restraining the conflict between the two all inclusive castes.

It is an admirable, incisive study of present-day conditions, as well as an entertaining, authoritative recital of Mexico's entire history.

EDWARD ROWLAND SILL.

EDWARD ROWLAND SILL: His Life and Work. By William Belmont Parker. Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston.

MR. PARKER may not be held to blame for certain features of Sill's biography which are likely to militate against the book in California. We would perhaps have had more affection for the author of "The Fool's Prayer" if his letters had not been published, for certainly they show him to have been something of a snob. We are forced to wonder why, if Sill disliked California so much as he implies, he didn't betake himself back to the Parnassian realms of New England and stay there.

Nor are we wholly satisfied with the evidence that presumes to raise Sill to the dignity of a biography which tries to make him out as a man of importance in letters. Beyond a few essays, a few poems, a futile attempt to revive a magazine that flourished under Bret Harte, and a reputation as a cultured college professor, he has nothing to distinguish him. "The Fool's Prayer" and "Opportunity" keep his name known to a limited circle. And the whole of his life was singularly uninteresting and uneventful.

Mr. Porter's explanation of why so many letters have been incorporated—that he wished to show as much of the man as possible through Sill's own expressions—is very good, but unfortunately the letters have little of interest in them beyond their intrinsic essay-like merit.

PUBLISHERS AND AUTHORS.

The remarkable success of "Sanine" has prompted Mr. Huebsch to arrange for the publication of all of Artzibashef's fiction. The next volume, which will appear this spring, entitled "The Millionaire," will contain a short story and two long ones of which one gives the volume its title. The other, "Ivan Lande," according to the author, brought him fame.

An autobiographical introduction in which Artzibashef tells about the circumstances surrounding the writing of "Sanine" is promised. He dispels at least two illusions, one, that "Sanine" was the product of the Russian Revolution. The book, written several years earlier, had been rejected by publishers who, after the Revolution, were eager to bring it out. Most people jump to the easy conclusion that the hero of "Sanine" personifies the Nietzschean ideal. Artzibashef tells us that he never read Nietzsche, not being able to get beyond the beginning of any of his volumes, and that he has been influenced by Max Stirner.

"I had the luck, while on a summer trip, to fall in with some of the men who wrote and illustrated for Jegenu and Simplicissimus. It was there that I got the impulse to write; and it makes me sad to think of those nice fellows, who were put into the world to add to its thought, being sacrificed to the Kaiser's insane ambition." This quotation from a letter written by Therese Tyler, gives an interesting insight as to the inspiration of her literary ambition. Though a Philadelphia society woman, she has been writing steadily ever since, although "The Dusty Road" is her first published novel.

The John C. Winston Company announces the early publication of a new book of verse by Harvey M. Watts, entitled "The Faith of Princes," being "An Apologue for The Times," and, in form a soliloquy by Caesar Borgia, preceded by a sheaf of sonnets to the nations at war, a brief prologue and epilogue in the eighteenth century style, which develop the irony of the title. The soliloquy, to which the book is given over, is a vivid and powerful study of the Italian Renaissance, full of color, fire and wit, and leads up to the dramatic incident of Caesar Borgia ordering the execution of his favorite, Ramiro D'Orco, who stood in his way. The incident is used as a framework for the development of the Machiavellian philosophy of the time in anticipation of the present-day application that "might makes right." The poem is a compelling argument for the faith of peoples as against the faith of princes. Hon. James M. Beck contributes a brief prose preface pointing out the significance of the Borgia poem in relation to present-day events in Europe.

The difficulties encountered by any writer who comes under the spell of that fascinating literary form, the one-act play, are shown by the fact that even so famous and successful a dramatist as Henry Arthur Jones has had to wait for years to gain recognition for his one-act plays, three of which have been published this spring, in "The Theater of Ideas." Mr. Jones himself says in the introduction to that book:

"It is a discouraging sign that neither on the English nor American stage is there any demand for one-act plays. These should be widely supported, as a valuable school for young playwrights and young actors. 'The Goal' (included in 'The Theater of Ideas') was written in 1897, and I had to wait seventeen years before I could get anything approaching a suitable representation. It was produced by Mr. Holbrook Blinn at the Princess Theater, New York, in October, 1914. It received very generous appreciation from the New York press, and I hope to offer it again to American playgoers."

A few years ago the calm of a book-surfeited public was startled by a series of remarkable essays written by Allen Upward and grouped under the title "The New Word." This spring Mr. Upward will have two books brought out, "The Divine Mystery" and "Paradise Found," which will be published by Houghton Mifflin Co., the latter part of this month. The first is a study of the Christian elements in the pre-Christian religions, an abstruse subject made fascinating by the erudition, the charm, and the charity of the character. The second is a skit of which Bernard Shaw is the leading character. It plays upon Shavian theories with phrases as searching, as flippant, as witty as any the great G. B. S. himself ever used in his ridicule of "middle-class morality."

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Councilman Michael Mullen of Cincinnati has closed a contract with the Coney Island Company for Mullen's family picnic, which will be held at Coney Island June 23, and unless all indications fail this year's outing will be bigger and better than ever. This means that on that day, if the weather man answers the appeal of thousands of little tots who are housed up in the congested tenements during the hot summer months, they will be given the opportunity to enjoy the boat ride along the river and spend a day in the country close to nature partaking of the fresh air.

The respective committees selected by Mr. Mullen will formulate plans for that day and see that no minute detail is overlooked that would add to the children's comfort and pleasure. Thousands of tickets will be distributed by the members of the committee among the residents of the Eighth Ward, and after they have been supplied the balance of the tickets will be sent to the different shoe and cigar factories throughout the city where large number of girls are employed.

Thousands of amusement and refreshment tickets will also be given to the children. The committee in charge of the athletic events, which always have been a feature of these outings, expect to arrange a programme that will give the little children, as well as the older ones, an opportunity to compete for the many substantial and handsome prizes that will be presented in connection with these events.

The lost children's headquarters will be established at the clubhouse and will be under the personal supervision of Jerry Carrol, sergeant at arms of the City Council, whose past experience in connection with these annual picnics has made him proficient in locating children who have become separated from their parents while romping about the grove. An emergency hospital will be established and will be in charge of competent physicians, who will render medical assistance to those who may meet with an accident.

Ten thousand dollars has been contributed anonymously for use by the American Red Cross "on the field of action in the European war wherever the society may find the need most urgent and without regard to the nationality of those whom it may benefit." This is the largest anonymous gift ever received by the Red Cross.

The money was deposited with a Philadelphia bank.

Falling from the roof of a four-story building on the site of the new public playground at Third and Madison streets, Wilmington, Del., Martin Lannan, aged 14, not only plunged the full height of the building, but dropped into Shipley Run sewer, which flows through the plot.

Rebecca Reader, aged 14, witnessed the accident, and when the boy did not come to the surface she climbed down, waded to the point where he fell, and held his head above water while she called for help. She was unable to pick the boy up bodily.

Patrolman Riley went to her assistance, lifted Lanna from the sewer, placed him in an automobile, and had him removed to Delaware Hospital. His skull is believed to be fractured and he is hurt internally.

Miss Reader saved the boy's life, for he would have drowned while lying unconscious in the sewer but for her action.

The sum of $103,231.89 was contributed during the last year to the work of the anti-Saloon League of Illinois. This is an increase of $2466.05 over the largest amount ever before received by the league, according to the report made by F. Scott McBride, the superintendent, at the annual meeting of the league in Springfield.

"The contributions from the churches have been about the same as in previous years," said Mr. McBride. "The increase has come by personal solicitation on the part of the field workers who realize the need for larger financial returns to make an aggressive campaign to drive saloons out of Illinois. It is encouraging to us to report the increase, in view of the general business depression."

At Tulsa, Okla., where every man is a millionaire, someone suggested that modern cities were endeavoring to build Y.M.C.A. homes. The oil magnates did not thoroughly understand about a "Y" home, but when the hat came around they pitched in $127,081, says the Tulsa World. Later on it was found that the money was a few dollars short of the requisite amount, and while the local ministers prayed for success, the hat was sent out a second time, and when it came back it contained $51,455, says the World, "notwithstanding these are hard times in 40-cent oil town."

The Belgian Relief Fund of Philadelphia for Destitute Non-Combatants, which turned its affairs over to the Pennsylvania Committee on April 1, made its report showing that during the six months in which it was engaged in soliciting funds it collected $160,767.61 and 4,660,529 pounds of food, worth $62,440.88. This brought the total value collected to $223,208.49.

A large proportion of the food collected by the fund was sent to Philadelphia by local committees throughout the State.

Of the total amount of cash received, $20,000 was transferred to the fund by the Newspaper Committee after the steamship Orn was loaded.

On April 1, the fund transferred to the Pennsylvania Committee $4108.37.

Announcement is made that Princeton University has completed the fund of $250,000 necessary to secure the gift of a like amount from Mrs. Russell Sage.

The half million dollars will be used for the erection of a new university dining hall, which will complete the Sage group of buildings.

July 1 was the time limit set by Mrs. Sage for the securing of the money. The construction of the building will be started soon after college closes.

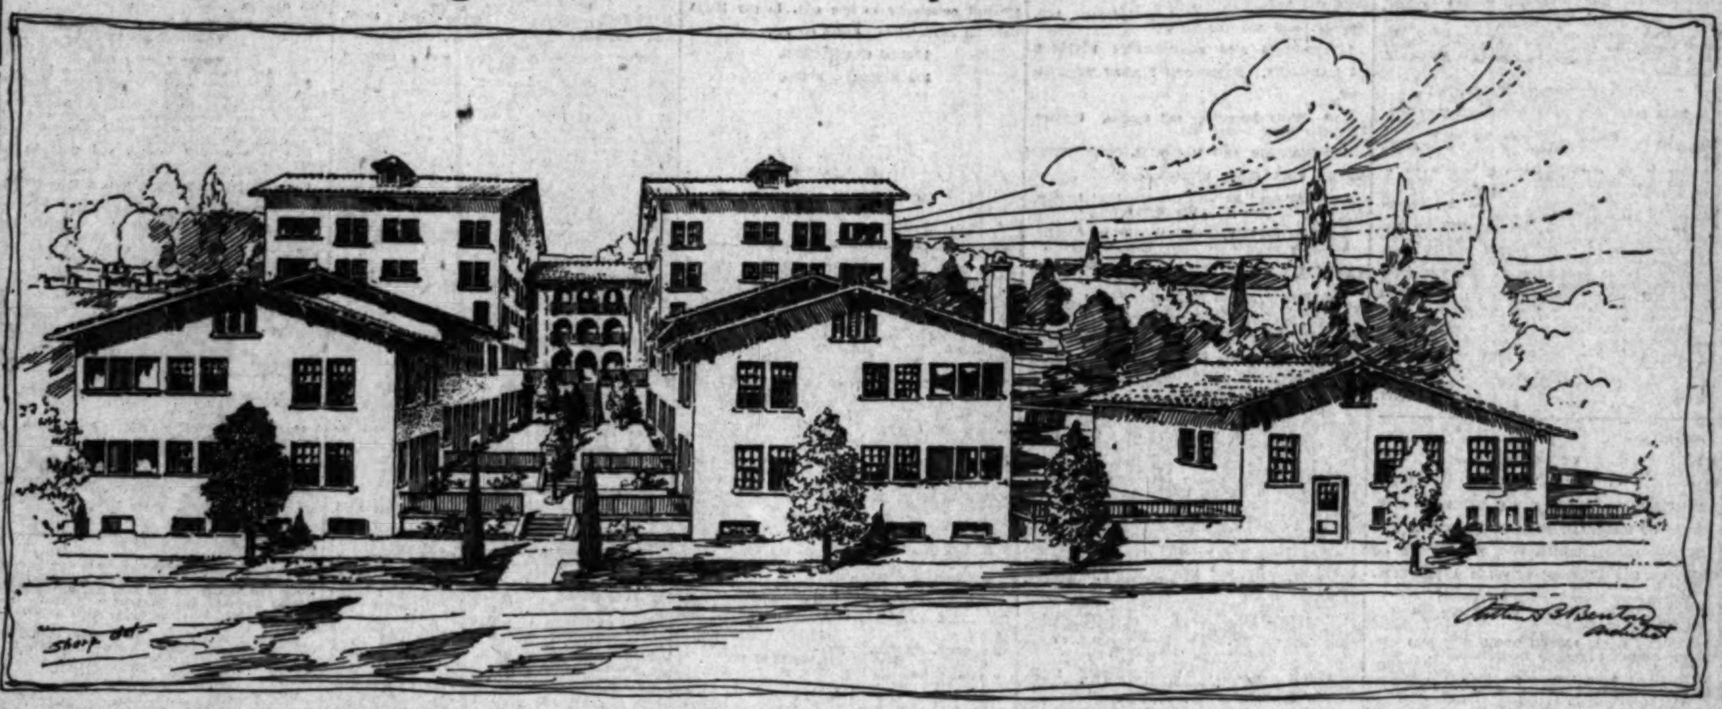
Unique Building Project of Local Capitalist in Crown Hill District.



Model fireproof apartment-house group planned for O. T. Johnson by Arthur B. Benton, and now under construction.

The structures shown will be of reinforced concrete and will have roofs of Spanish clay tile. Special attention has been given to sanitary arrangements, and all "frills" have been eliminated. An unusual feature is the provision made for the care of children, both day nursery and playground facilities being contemplated in the plans. Mr. Johnson has attempted to incorporate in the project the best ideas evolved by housing commissions throughout the country.

SCHOOL AWARDS.

Contracts Let for Three Grade Buildings During Past Week—Bids Being Taken on Others.

Contracts were awarded during the past week for three of the new public schools to be erected in this city under the provisions of the big $6,000,000 bond issue approved by the voters last fall. Bids are being taken on a number of others.

To B. D. Kronnick was given the contract for the construction of a two-story and basement brick grade building planned by Montgomery & Montgomery for a site on Buchanan street, between Avenues Fifty and Fifty-one. The cost will be around $30,000. The H. M. Howard & Sons Company received the contract to build a five-room addition to the present Aragon-street school, in accordance with plans drawn by George F. Costerisan. Charles McCulley was given the contract to build a $25,000 grammar school at No. 1511 Michelorena street, from plans by A. T. Large.

Working plans were completed during the week for a brick and concrete grammar schol to be built at No. 8515 South Park avenue, and bids are to be received this week and next. The structure will contain eight classrooms, an auditorium and a domestic science department, and will be two stories high. The sum of $46,000 has been set aside by the board for the project. Walker & Vawter are the architects. Bids are also to be taken this week for the construction of a five-room school at the corner of Santa Monica boulevard and Van Ness avenue. Parker O. Wright is the architect.

Year's Largest Deal.

REX ARMS SELLS FOR SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND.

Splendid Fireproof Apartment-house on Orange Street Bought by Portland Man—Consideration Half Cash and Half Trade, Seller Receiving Valuable Northwest Business Holding — Buyer to Live Here.

THE largest real estate transfer of the year in Los Angeles was concluded yesterday when the magnificent Rex Arms apartments at No. 943 Orange street changed hands at a given consideration of $600,000 F. O. Engstrum of this city was the seller and H. Clay Breeden, a retired Portland merchant, who has been spending his winters in Los Angeles for the past ten years, was the buyer. Both principals in the transaction were represented by E. B. Giffen and V. P. Demens, of the E. B. Giffen Company.

The Rex Arms is one of the largest and costliest buildings of its type in the United States and was completed by Mr. Engstrum about two years ago. The structure occupies a ground area of 75x228 feet and is eight stories in height. It is of reinforced concrete construction and absolutely fireproof.

The interior woodwork throughout is in mahogany and the lobby is splendidly furnished in marble and hardwoods. There are 265 rooms, a large ballroom, billiard-rooms and parlors, all with outside exposure. The place is luxuriously furnished and is under lease to R. R. Bittinger for five years at an annual rental of $48,000.

The property comprises not only the apartment building itself, but a fireproof garage, 50x228 feet in size, adjoining it on the west. There is also a considerable space at the rear and sides in lawn and garden. The premises are practically a small city to themselves, one of the unique features being a complete grocery store and market equipment in the basement for the exclusive use of the guests. Every convenience known to the best metropolitan hotels is provided, the appointments representing the last word in apartment-house equipment.

PRICE HALF CASH.

Of the consideration paid by Mr. Breeden, $300,000 is stated to have been in cash. The rest is represented by a valuable business holding at the corner of Third and Washington streets in Portland. This property is declared to be one of the best situated pieces of real estate in the Oregon city, being within a short distance of the famous Multnomah Hotel. The site is 50x100 feet and is improved with a three-story brick business block. Mr. Engstrum expects to hold the property as an investment.

Mr. Breeden is at present living at No. 1115 Lake street and has definitely decided to close out his Northwest business interests and make Los Angeles his permanent home. He has made a number of Southern California realty purchases in the past few years, and three years ago bought the site of the old Decatur Hotel at Ocean Park, selling it a short time after to the late Adolphus Busch.

Mr. Engstrum, as the head of the F. O. Engstrum Company, has been identified with many of the largest and most important building enterprises in the city. Among other structures recently completed by his company are the new Citizens' National Bank block, the New Rosslyn Hotel and the Metropolitan Building.

The Engstrum Company was the pioneer in the construction of fireproof apartment-houses in Los Angeles, having built practically all the buildings of this type in the city. The Rampart apartments, at Sixth and Rampart; the Bryson apartments, at Wilshire and Rampart; the Engstrum apartments, on Fifth near Hope, and the Rex Arms, all splendid fireproof structures of the most metropolitan type, have been constructed by the company within the past four years.

The Bryson and the Rampart were built by Hugh W. Bryson, general manager of the company, and later sold by him, the former for approximately $1,000,000, and the latter for about $450,000. The Engstrum was built and is still owned by Fred Engstrum, vice-president of the company. The price paid for the Rex Arms is, next to that paid for the Bryson, the largest consideration ever paid for an apartment-house in the West.

WILL BUILD FLATS.

Buyer of Large Site at New Hampshire and Eighth Streets Plans Fine Income Improvements.

John G. Staub, with C. C. C. Tatum, reports the sale of the northwest corner of New Hampshire and Eighth street, 106x150 feet, to Joseph M. Smalles. The consideration is given at $10,000.

Mr. Smalles will at once improve the corner with two flat buildings, one of frame, with plastered exterior, and the other of brick construction. Both structures will be finished in hardwoods.

NEW BROADWAY STORE.

The firm of Plummer & Feil of this city was commisioned yesterday to prepare plans for alterations to be made in the corner storeroom in the Byrne Building at Third and Broadway, which has been leased by Albert Cohn as a branch grocery house. The present store fronts will be remodeled and new partitions constructed. The work will be started at once. Mr. Cohn has secured a ten-year lease on the Broadway premises and will open at the location the largest and finest of his establishments, to be known as Store No. 3. W. W. Mines represented both lessor and lessee in the transaction.

WILL CONSULT WITH OWNERS.

JOINT BUREAU OF APPRAISAL CALLS MEETING OF THOSE INTERESTED IN TAXATION.

A meeting of unusual interest to property owners and taxpayers in this city has been called for Tuesday, May 25, at 2 o'clock p.m., in the audience room on the tenth floor of the Metropolitan Building. The gathering will be the first "get-together" event contemplated in the plan of the newly-created joint bureau of appraisal for arriving at equitable assessment appraisals through consultation with realty owners and dealers.

The meeting will have for its particular object the investigation of property values comprised within a downtown zone bounded by First, Ninth and Los Angeles streets and Grand avenue.

The bureau, in a letter directed to downtown property owners, real estate brokers, bankers and others interested in realty values and taxation methods, gives a brief outline of its plans and purposes. A system of appraisals that is declared to have been used with success in a number of cities is to be put into application in the bureau's work.

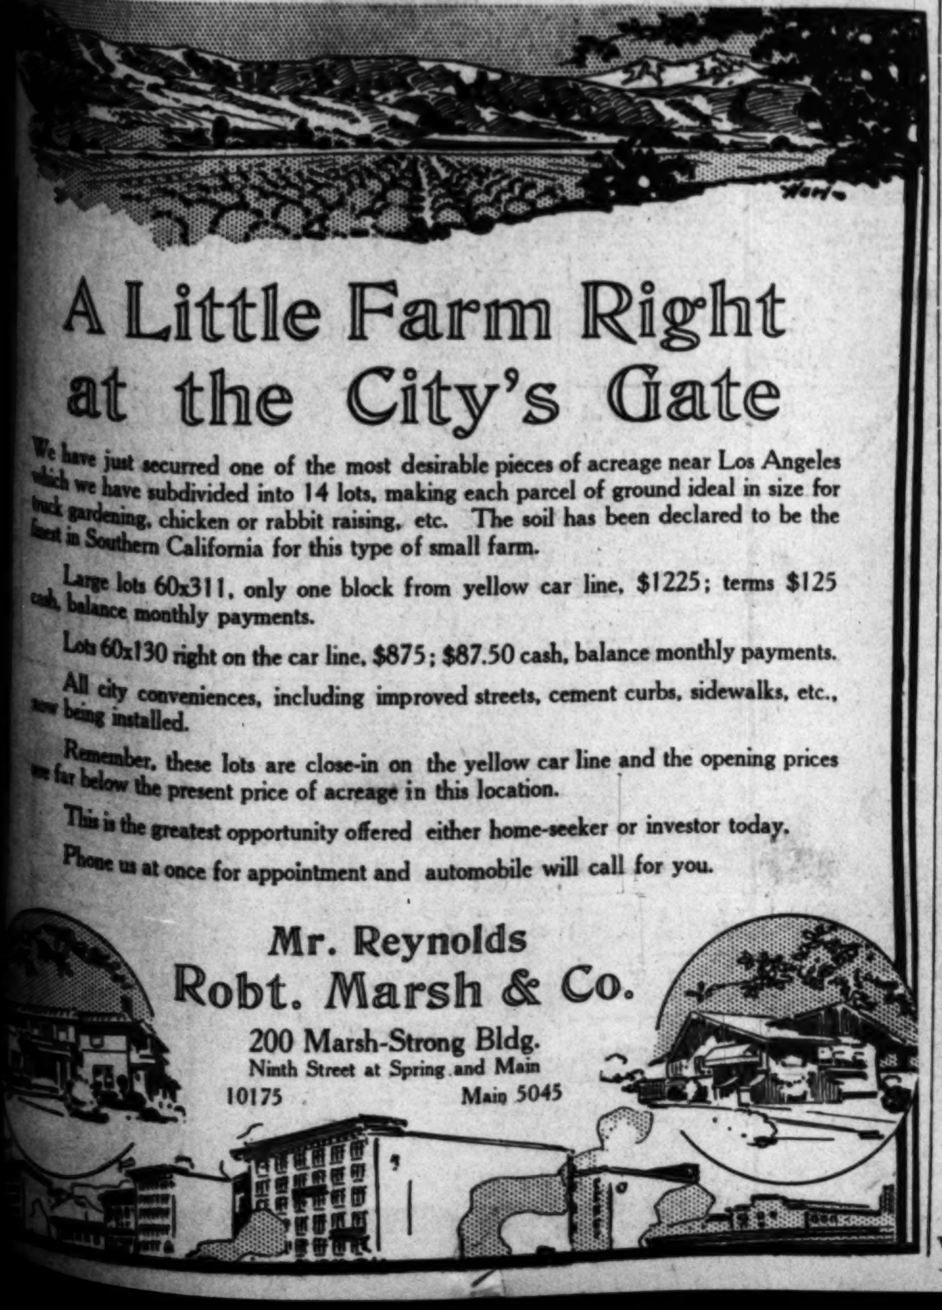
This system is intended to provide: (1.) A basis for obtaining common judgment of land values. (2.) A uniform method of applying that judgment. (3.) A basis for comparing the value of one lot with another, one block with another, and one district with another. (4.) Complete analysis of the factors which enter into realty values. (5.) Means of properly classifying buildings. (6.) Uniform inventory of building construction. (7.) Uniform methods of ascertaining reproductive cost. (8.) Uniform methods of depreciating buildings according to age, condition and usefulness.

MASONS TO BUILD.

Drawings have been started for a two-story brick building to be erected by the Mispah Masonic Lodge at Hoover and Pico streets. The building will contain stores on the ground floor and a lodgeroom and banquet hall on the second story. It will cover a ground area of 42x116 feet. Tuttle & Angel are preparing the plans.

Rex Arms apartments, No. 943 Orange street.

Valuable income property sold yesterday by F. O. Engstrum to H. Clay Breeden of Portland, for more than half-million dollars. E. B. Giffen and V. P. Demens of the E. B. Giffen Company were the agents.



A Little Farm Right at the City's Gate

We have just securred one of the most desirable pieces of acreage near Los Angeles which we have subdivided into 14 lots, making each parcel of ground ideal in size for truck gardening, chicken or rabbit raising, etc. The soil has been declared to be the finest in Southern California for this type of small farm.

Large lots 60x311, only one block from yellow car line, $1225; terms $125 cash, balance monthly payments.

Lots 60x130 right on the car line, $875; $87.50 cash, balance monthly payments.

FACT AND COMMENT.

The recently launched movement to have the city, county, a special assessment district and the Santa Fe, Salt Lake and Los Angeles railways join forces in the construction of a great viaduct over the river at East Seventh street marks a real departure from the accepted way of doing things in Los Angeles. Heretofore, it has usually been the assessment districts alone that have footed the bills for public improvements, with the public generally participating without cost to itself in the benefits. The viaduct proceedings are decidedly an innovation and have in them a significance that promises to be far-reaching.

The project, duly set forth by resolution, has already been approved by the City Council, which has gone so far as to instruct the City Attorney to prepare the necessary ordinance of intention. In so far as the city and county are concerned, all points are covered by an enabling act, passed by the State Legislature at its last session, giving cities and counties in California the right to unite in carrying out public improvements benefiting the general community. Conferences with the railway officials and interested property owners must, of course, follow, but no serious opposition to the plan seems to be anticipated by its sponsors.

This new river span will be of vital importance to Boyle Heights, a boon to the county and a decided asset to the city of Los Angeles, but the means employed in its construction will probably attract more attention than will the improvement itself. The backers of the plan are establishing a precedent which is almost sure to influence many public improvement enterprises from this time forth. The thing that the people generally will note and remember is that the proponents of the viaduct have insisted from the start that the whole public should help pay for the project. That and the fact that these same proponents have succeeded in getting away with it.

Effective Protest.

The boosters for the much-needed new passageway over the river-bed railroad lines have come out squarely with a declaration of principles that is likely to prove quite the most effective protest yet offered against the special assessment method as it has been practiced in this city. They have said flatly that they did not intend to pay the entire cost of a major improvement which would not only benefit the whole public, but which was urgently demanded as a part of a logical city plan. As the ones most directly benefited, they have agreed to the formation of an assessment district which will bear a larger proportion of the total cost than will any other one contributing factor, but on the point of refusing to pay the entire expense they have stood firm.

Of course, the thing that interests the assessment-burdened property owners of Los Angeles the most is the fact that the city should have recognized any obligation to share in the expense of the viaduct. The number of cases in which the county could reasonably be asked to help out in city improvements are not numerous. It so happens that the viaduct is the one thing most needed to give easy access between the county highways touching the city on the east and the downtown district. It is the participation of the city in the undertaking that will set people to thinking, and which, incidentally, is likely to give the City Councils for some years to come something to think about. It will be interesting to see just how the next special assessment district scheme for some general improvement works out.

Change Needed.

FOR SALE— Houses.

FOR SALE—WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY—HAVE you always longed to build your own home—just a cosy little bungalow, but with every little detail just to your liking? That's what you've always wanted to do, isn't it? But you've never been able to pay current expenses and save out enough to get your lot clear; have you? I CAN LET YOU HAVE YOUR HEART'S DESIRE. I have the lots and am building three modern six-room bungalows, all of individual design. Two are now ready for all the little touches that make a home represent essentially YOURSELF, such as the tone of the woodwork—wall decoration, etc. You can have that soft gray color scheme you've always talked about in your own particular room—or that fetching little delft blue and white breakfast room. I will follow your taste in finishing, electrical fixtures, arrangement of cabinets and built-in features. With two of the houses I can make any reasonable change, even on the plans, as I am just starting to build by day labor, another feature that insures you substantial work. COME AND TALK TO ME AND LET'S PLAN YOUR NEW HOME TOGETHER. You will find my prices right, too. Your choice of any of my four houses ranging from $3000 to $3500, and terms to suit the limitations of your financial condition. Lots beautifully located in well-established residential tract, in city limits, 5c car line at your very door, every convenience. See me at my home, or office.

INVESTORS IN REAL ESTATE!
YOUR OPPORTUNITY IS NOW!
Prices on city and suburban homes as well as acreage, both improved and unimproved, are now at bed-rock prices! Make up your mind that from now on they will advance instead of decline! The unmistakable signs of the times are for returning prosperity! In buying now you profit by present conditions and in the near future reap the harvest of your investments!
Our listing of all classes of property are all fresh—obtained within the past few months—and, therefore, are at conservative prices.
Our aim, particularly, is to please the buyer, and if you contemplate investing in any kind of real estate consult us. We give you the benefit of many years active work in buying and selling real estate; have a thorough knowledge of values, and will find just what you want and at satisfactory prices.
We extend a cordial invitation to come and see us.

FOR SALE—

FIVE AND SIX-ACRE TRACTS

DIRECTLY UPON PAVED ROAD

INSIDE THE CITY LIMITS

FOR $500 AN ACRE.

We have a few pieces of very choice land, facing directly upon the State highway, in the San Fernando Valley.

This land is choice in quality, the location is exceptionally good. The prices quoted are much below those asked for similar property, and we are in position to make very favorable terms.

Since Owens River water was made a certainty for San Fernando Valley, sales of the most desirable lands are proceeding rapidly, and this we offer is good enough to be looked after right away. Our automobile will take you there in a short and pleasant ride.

FOR SALE—

A FREE TRIP.

To Garden Acres is offered you. Autos leave our offices every day at 10:30 a.m. You are invited to be our guest. Why not come today and see where one gets the most land for the least money? Garden Acres is just a mile and a quarter outside the city limits, and it will only be a matter of a little while until it is inside the city limits. Do you realize what that means? It means a nice big profit for the man or woman who buys now. Garden Acres offers you a home as well as an investment and an independent living.

FOR SALE—
HAPPINESS
That Is What We Are All Looking For.
GOOD SOIL.
ABUNDANT WATER.
CLIMATE.
MARKETS.

These four qualities, when mixed with common sense and a little hard work, will make you happy and independent of hard times.

I can make you happy by selling you a 20-acre Modesto Farm—in the heart of the great Modesto Irrigation District—only 6 miles to Modesto and 3 miles to Riverbank. Fronting on the State Highway and within a quarter of a mile of the electric car line operating between Modesto and Stockton. The soil is a sandy loam, absolutely free of hardpan or alkali. In a highly-improved section, with good neighbors. The climate is ideal, being tempered by cool breezes. No swamps, no overflow lands, no malaria. The markets are unequalled; 6 miles to Modesto, a town of 8000; 25 miles to Stockton, 45,000; 93 miles to Oakland and San Francisco—a market of over a million people. This land is being sold at $175 per acre—less than it is really worth. Consider what you get when you buy this land—then ask if you could wish for anything more in the way of a farm. Let me tell you more about this offering.
FRED OLIVER, with GUY M. BUSH COMPANY,

FOR SALE—
THE NINTH WONDER OF THE WORLD.
YOU WILL BE SORRY—
When the pendulum of opportunity swings backward—when the war is ended—when normal conditions return—when the floodgates of capital are opened—when the tide of home seekers and investors turns irresistibly toward the Golden West, and normal conditions again control progress.
YOU NEVER AGAIN WILL BUY
PERRIS IRRIGATED FARMS AT $150 AN ACRE WITH WATER RIGHTS.
Why you did not do it when you could will be the ninth wonder of the world to you. The largest tract of fine land under its own irrigation system so close to Los Angeles, supreme for dairy, alfalfa and farm products—peerless for deciduous fruits—unequaled for great future value.
HEART OF THE AGRICULTURAL SOUTH.
ONLY 2½ HOURS LOS ANGELES.
Free books—free maps—one-day return trips any time. Ask now.
P.S.—Eight years' time. Buy of the owner.

Mexico.

FOR SALE—
MEXICAN HEADQUARTERS.
Mr. Investor, look here, stop for a minute and reason this out. Here are 7500 acres 6 miles below the U. S. border, just as level and rich as any land about Los Angeles. On one side joined by Los Angeles parties, on other side by Ohio people who are planning to put their land on at $25 per acre, just as soon as conditions in Mexico become normal, which will come to pass one of these days. Now this 7500 is very choice, with ABUNDANCE of water, both by river or artesian wells, and titles are absolutely perfect, land is clear, the price now is only $7.50 per acre, 1-4 down, balance easy. It's worth $25 to any man; as a land investment it will be worth $100, and only $1.87½ per acre required to hold this snap. Come in and let us show you.

ORANGE AND LEMON GROVES—
For Sale, Exchange, Wanted.

FOR SALE—

DOWNRIGHT SACRIFICE.

FOR CASH.

If you really have the money and are disposed to act when you see a real bargain, we have two or three astonishing propositions. There is nothing the matter with these groves. The trouble is with the owners. They are in local business, cannot attend to their groves, are in great need of ready money, hence these genuine sacrifices.
One excellent 11-acre place, 15-year-old trees, good producer right now, in good condition, certainly reasonable value at $1500 per acre—can deliver at $700 per acre.

Another, 10 acres, worth every dollar of $1500 per acre ordinarily, $650 per acre.

Still another, 10 acres, uncommonly well located, with good house, etc., worth $14,000—$8500, real garden soil. Small mortgages on all of above, not due.

Also 20 acres, just coming to bearing, fine, clear property, finely located, S.E. Claremont, $600 per acre, will divide.

Here is one for exchange, 15 acres, young Valencias, good house, pumping plant, garden soil. Fine location, $22,500. Family affairs require owner to leave the State.
Mr. Blades,
STRONG, DICKINSON & McGRATH,

FOR SALE—

One of the finest orange grove homes in Southern California; ten acres full bearing, with a good nine-room house, barn, garage, shade trees, shrubbery and lawn, as well as domestic orchard. A grove with a fine record of over 6000 boxes per year. The price of the grove has been $27,000, but for a quick sale $16,500 will buy it. $7000 mortgage, balance cash. If you are hunting a bargain, here it is.
FRANK WHEELER,
CLAREMONT, CAL.

FOR SALE—
Ten acres, gentleman's country home, with choice orange grove. One of the most beautiful spots to be found in California, a magnificent home with elegant surroundings. Large garage. The grove is in the pink of condition, yielding large crops. The owner of this property is obliged to move East for business reasons and has placed a big sacrifice on this property, which he planned for his permanent home. He will not allow me to advertise this sacrifice price, but if you are looking for a home and an investment this property can be bought at a big bargain.

FOR EXCHANGE—OR SALE—

WALNUT, ALFALFA AND DAIRY RANCH

One of the best located and highest improved ranches in Southern California, close to Los Angeles. Consisting of 85 acres, 20 acres planted to soft-shell budded walnuts one year old, the entire ranch is seeded to fine stand of alfalfa. Improvements consist of 6-room modern bungalow, 4-room tenant house, stock barn, large hay barn, bunk house, large pumping plant, delivering double the amount of water needed for irrigation; large lawn, shade, family orchard, telephone, electric lights, place all fenced; in fact, everything that would constitute a strictly high-class ranch. Located three city blocks from railroad station, stores, postoffice and school. ½ mile from State highway, this is a proven walnut section, as trees now in bearing will show, also ideal location for dairy or hog ranch. My strictly cash price is $40,000. Will make easy terms and will consider good income property for good part and plenty time on rest, might assume. Please do not submit inflated values, as time will be lost. I will make a good deal and my values will stand strict investigation.

Address POST BOX NO. 345, Riverside, Cal.

FOR EXCHANGE—480 ACRES LAKE TULARE bottom land, Kings county, Cal.; no richer land in the State; over 70 bushels barley and 50 bushels wheat last season, on this lake land; besides the overflow of the lake, it has a ditch water right, second only to 700 acres; 400 acres now in wheat, and 80 acres in barley; grain will bring big money; now is the time to buy, so near harvest; a good investment for non-resident; patent title, clear of all incumbrance; the price with all the crop is only $45 per acre; third cash, third when crop is harvested, and third one year, at 7 per cent. Best buy on the market; or would trade for a good dairy ranch or alfalfa land adapted to dairying; on one of the main lines between here and Fresno, for my own use; but it must be priced at its actual cash value; could put in more land adjoining mine up to 1440 acres, but these other owners will not trade.

Another tract of 160 acres in wheat, nearer the railway, at $50 per acre, with all the crop, $2500 cash, $2500 when crop is harvested, $1500 one year, and $1500 two years, at 7 per cent. Or owner will reserve all this growing crop and sell at $30 per acre, and only $1800 cash, $1[illegible] one year, and $1500 two years. T. S. TOMPKINS, part owner, 116 E. Seventh st.

WE OFFER FOR IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.
7 PER CENT.
LOS ANGELES
MUNICIPAL STREET IMPROVEMENT BONDS.

These bonds are issued by the city of Los Angeles and pay 7 per cent. interest and an added amount for redemption. They are exempt by law from taxation and income tax and are first liens on a specific piece of property, the ratio of security being in most cases 10 to 1. They are ahead of mortgages and all liens except taxes. All payments received and disbursed by City Treasurer. We register bonds, look after prompt payment without cost to you. Act quickly as Los Angeles bonds are seldom available.

I WANT TO TALK TO YOU STRAIGHT-FROM-THE-SHOULDER.
I WANT TO TELL YOU SOME FACTS.
I want to impress upon you the truth as to the merit of a Goldfield stock. Mind you, this is not a promotion, it is a listed stock. In the boom days of Goldfield it was a great favorite with the public and sold to high prices. It owns its own ground and has been a shipper of high grade.
I want a chance to tell you about it and to demonstrate to you that in this is the opportunity for a money maker. It is selling today at a very low price. The active work that has started should carry the price to several times that of today.
For information address,
A. J. MOORE, Bacon Block, Oakland, California.

LARGE CLASSES IN GYMNASTICS.

LOCAL Y.W.C.A. HAS COUNTRY'S RECORD FOR THE BEST ATTENDANCE.

The enrollment in the department of hygiene at the Y.W.C.A. is showing a marked increase. The association holds the record of having the largest enrollment in this department of any other association in the United States. The object of this department is to teach good habits of living, through exercise and wholesome recreation.

During the past year 2564 women and children have been registered in the department. The classes include systematic exercise in Swedish and German gymnastics, folk and esthetic work, games, swimming, outdoor games, tennis, English hockey and classes in first aid to the injured. In addition many social features have been enjoyed, among them gymnasium and beach parties, mountain hikes and camping.

The first term of the scholastic year begins June 4 and ends July 24. The outdoor athletics are held at the association field at Huntington Park. Classes are conducted in the morning, afternoon and evening.

All pupils registered in the gymnasium classes receive one lesson each week in swimming free and also free instruction in tennis.

Gymnasium classes meet Monday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to noon and from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.. Children's classes meet Saturday from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m.

DIAGNOSES CASES, MUCH SURPRISED.

NO AUTOMOBILES BROKE THE WRISTS OF THESE TWO WOMEN.

Assistant Surgeon Hiller was given two surprises at the Receiving Hospital yesterday morning when he inquired of two women concerning injuries to their wrists. To each he said: "Why don't you get an electric starter for your machine and then you would never get hurt in this way." "Why, I don't own or run a machine," each answered. One said her wrist was broken when she fell and the other when she was kicked from a porch by an unknown man.

Miss Mary Arran, 54 years old, No. 1043 New Hampshire street, fell downstairs when she tripped on her skirt. Her right wrist was fractured and she suffered abrasions about the body.

Mrs. Nora Whalen, No. 444 East Fourth street, said she sat on a porch near Ninth and Crocker streets to get a little rest and a man came from behind and kicked her into the street. She fell on her left wrist, which snapped.

Chance to Jump Ahead.

SEVEN DAYS ARE LEFT OF SPECIAL VOTE OFFER.

Candidates Plan Whirlwind Campaign for this Entire Week, to Take Advantage of Extra Twenty Thousand Ballots for Each Lot of Five Yearly Subscriptions Turned in Before Saturday Night.

NOW for the "big week" in The Times Educational Contest.

Just seven more days remain of the special period within which 20,000 extra votes are allowed contestants for each lot of five yearly subscriptions, or their equivalent in shorter-term subscriptions, turned in to the contest headquarters.

This offer will expire at midnight on May 29. It positively will not be repeated during this entire campaign. No contestant can afford to neglect such an opportunity. One of those extra lots of 20,000 votes may be the means of making you a winner of the first choice of scholarships when the final count is made, and give you the first extra reward of $250 in gold coin for incidental school expenses. If you want your efforts to count to their best advantage in this campaign don't fail to get out and hustle for subscriptions this week, and thus make sure of some of those lots of five and the big blocks of extra votes.

NEW BOY'S GOOD WORK.

These are the days when records are being made in the great Educational Contest. Each day is bringing its pleasant surprises, and the one yesterday was provided by Julius Nasatir, the "live-wire" new candidate at Santa Ana.

Julius has broken all previous records of the long-distance jump in the vote count. Listen! From a score that would include only the 500 original votes granted free to contestants when they enter the campaign, Julius Nasatir has jumped up seventy-eight places. His name appears today with a score of more than 15,000 votes.

Right here is the evidence that you can start in tomorrow and make your own place in the voting column one of much credit within the ensuing week. Your earnest work will give you the regular credits on both old and new subscriptions that you take—three times as much for the new as the old, however—and then for each lot of five yearly subscriptions, or their equivalent in three and six months' subscriptions, you will receive an extra credit of 20,000. This special offer has full seven days to run. Make the most of it. Don't hold your subscriptions to send them in in bunches of five; send them in as you get them and they will all be counted in on the reckoning of the lots of five when the offer expires.

TAKE HEED OF THIS!

The contest manager again wants to warn the contestants about certain points. In the first place it must be clearly understood that subscriptions must be for not less than three months nor for more than one year in this contest, and that they must be for the regular daily issue. Subscriptions for the Sunday Times only do not count in this campaign. Then the contestant must send in to headquarters both the yellow and white slips, with the names clearly written. Much trouble has been occasioned by the illegible writing on some of the contracts. Don't let your eagerness to secure a subscription contract prevent you from taking plenty of time to write the name and address of the subscriber very plainly, and also bear in mind this admonition in regard to your own name and address. A little care here saves lots of trouble.

The Times pays commissions to contestants on all new business secured. Some of the contestants are making this count big for them in the way of making expense money for the campaign.

THE STANDING TODAY.

Of intense interest to the contestants and their hosts of friends is the voting score shown today. Again there comes a shift in positions of some of the leaders, while others prove their ability to climb right ahead.

Were the awards of scholarships to be made on today's standing the following would be in the winning list, and the first fourteen would also receive the gold coin special awards, for incidental school expenses, ranging from $250 to $25:

Dorothy V. N. Risden, No. 3407 South Flower street; Gladys Sowers, No. 997 South Hobart boulevard; Earl Stanley, No. 389 North Fair Oaks avenue, Pasadena; Cecil Aynes, El Centro; Ralph Hoisington, No. 1801 Jefferson street; Overton B. Ross, No. 10 Allen Court, Riverside; Clayton Votan, No. 421 West Painter street, Whittier; Mary Redman, No. 3917 Normandie avenue; Laura Belle Ormon, No. 219 East C street, Van Nuys; Jack Benton Hosford, South Santa Anita; Wallace McIlhaney, No. 313 Cordova street, Alhambra; Perry Hollingsworth, No. 718½ West Third street; Bessie Jones, Gardena; Maxwell Pease, No. 243 North Painter street, Whittier; Sam Glassman, No. 1234 Ionia street; Reginald Williams, No. 744 Gaviota avenue, Long Beach; Alvin C. Goodale, No. 385 Oakland avenue, Pasadena; Joy Fletcher, No. 3119 Baldwin street; Lucille Matz, No. 212 Villa City, Venice; Lucian Edwards, Jr., Fullerton; Russell Fletcher, No. 1219 West Thirty-seventh drive; John D. Duffy, No. 168 East H street, Colton; Ethel Beck, La Habra; Frances E. Fleming, No. 519 West Forty-ninth street; Curtis Bridges, Imperial; Otto N. Gillingham, No. 246 Almond street, Compton; Paul J. Brooks, No. 211 South Jackson street, Glendale; Arthur Duchman, No. 505 East Center street, Anaheim; Louis Martin, P. O. box 148, Arlington; Helen Wilson, Second and Brighton streets, El Centro; Emel Smith, No. 1028 West Forty-eighth street; Leslie N. Booher, No. 218 McFarland street, San Fernando; Claude Benson, Bell and Clendenen, No. 2909 Pasadena avenue.

CAMPAIGN NEWS.

One of the very latest contestants to enter the campaign is Harold Knowles of No. 1637 East Seventh street, Long Beach. Harold is 16 years of age and a student at the Long Beach Polytechnic High School. His first report places him in a position in the voting schedule that is forty-four steps up the ladder.

Harold Carter sends in a report from Ocean Park to advance his vote count, as also does Dannie Woods at Venice. Miss Bessie Jones, the little business woman of Gardena, continues to show her ability to secure subscription contracts, and to keep in the list of those 'way up in the voting column.

Miss Frances E. Fleming of No. 519 West Forty-ninth street made a report yesterday that advances her several places nearer the top-liners. She is thoroughly in earnest and is using every moment of her spare time in this campaign, with fine results.

Miss Dorothy V. M. Risdon of No. 3407 South Flower street continues her winning way, and marches ahead with an increased vote score. Dorothy is a systematic worker and makes her time count every day.

THE GOLD REWARDS.

Here is the way the gold coin for school expenses is to be distributed to the fourteen contestants having the fourteen highest scores of votes:

First choice of scholarships and $250 in gold to the candidate securing the highest number of votes.

Second choice of scholarships and $150 in gold to the candidate securing the second highest number of votes.

Third choice of scholarships and $100 in gold to the candidate securing the third highest number of votes.

Fourth choice of scholarships and $50 in gold to the candidate securing the fourth highest number of votes.

Fifth choice of scholarships and $50 in gold to the candidate securing the fifth highest number of votes.

Sixth choice of scholarships and $50 in gold to the candidate securing the sixth highest number of votes.

Seventh choice of scholarships and $50 in gold to the candidate securing the seventh highest number of votes.

Eighth choice of scholarships and $50 in gold to the candidate securing the eighth highest number of votes.

Ninth choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the ninth highest number of votes.

Tenth choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the tenth highest number of votes.

Eleventh choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the eleventh highest number of votes.

Twelfth choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the twelfth highest number of votes.

Thirteenth choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the thirteenth highest number of votes.

Fourteenth choice of scholarships and $25 in gold to the candidate securing the fourteenth highest number of votes.

HOT WIND-UP TO CAMPAIGN.

Emotional Contest Speeds up Near the Finish.

Whiffen and Sebastian Eclipse All Others.

Laub Prediction is that Chief Wins Two to One.

Candidates are talking themselves hoarse, precinct lines are tightening, mushroom organizations are selling indorsements far below the market price, the firing of scandal charges has subsided, personalities are disappearing, and excitement is heightening—for the municipal campaign is winding up toward an emotional climax.

It has been an emotional campaign, for there has yet been no serious discussion of the fitness of candidates, nor the merit of issues. Narrowed down to its finest analysis, the campaign is based entirely upon the case of the people ex rel. Whiffen vs. Sebastian.

Candidates for the Council, however, are putting up the most interesting fight that ever has been waged in a contest of that sort. Laboring under the eclipse of the emotional struggle over the head of the ticket, the Councilmanic candidates have found themselves in a scramble where position is now assured for only a few.

The Whiffen campaign has been effective only in the last week. It was not until toward the middle of the week that the organization really showed signs of having rallied from the primary disappointment, when Mr. Whiffen was a poor second.

Campaign Manager Snowden, W. M. Humphreys, Will H. Fischer and Pitt P. Hand, the backbone of the Whiffen organization, began to feel more hopeful yesterday when they wound up a week of uphill fighting and saw plenty of encouragement for their efforts, for the mechanical part of the work was rounding out in fine shape.

Mr. Whiffen passed a busy week. His supplemental platform, issued during the week, launched a campaign on a much broader scale and injected an element of liberality into the Whiffen policy. That it was helpful, his supporters are quite sure, for they have gotten a rise out of the enemy.

Mr. Whiffen has addressed an average of four audiences a day for the last week and he will jump the average to six this coming week. In addition to his own work a flying squadron of speakers is busy in his behalf.

Mr. Whiffen will make a campaign among the women the coming week, in addition to the other work already outlined. His itinerary includes a number of speeches at women's clubs.

THE SEBASTIAN END.

Chief Sebastian, who was high man at the primaries, has lost no ground while the Whiffen organization has been undoubtedly gaining. In fact, if anything, the Sebastian supporters are in much higher glee than at any time during his campaign. They argue that if he could poll so high a vote at the primary, while his case was still pending in court, his vote, following acquittal, must be enormous.

Men and women of influence who have added their services to the Sebastian campaign, have helped to build up a formidable organization. Campaign Manager McAleer finds it much easier to conduct a campaign now than he did during the primary fight.

The Chief has been doing some personal campaigning, which was not his privilege during the primary fight when he remained in court most of the time prior to his acquittal. He did not enlarge upon his original platform, but he has broadened the humanity of his policy by adding an advocacy of such things as public defender for the police courts and other matters of similar kind.

The Sebastian headquarters in the Mason Operahouse Building have been swarming for several days. In the dark days before the primary, when the appearance of a new face was an event at that institution, Director Hancock, Precinct Manager Hill and others consoled with Campaign Manager McAleer, who was quite lonely in his private office. During the last week four guards have been stationed at the doors to keep track of the waiting list, for audiences with the head of the organization were hard to find.

Eight addresses a day was the record of Chief Sebastian for three days during the week. He was indorsed by several organizations and the speaking squad was enlarged to cover an almost endless list of meetings.

A reception for the Chief will be held at the Alexandria on the afternoon of next Thursday. The affair will take place in the Alexandria ballroom. The roster of patronesses reads like the list of club presidents and prominent women leaders of the city.

The Woman's Sebastian Booster Committee is arranging a rally for next Saturday night and already several of the most prominent men and women in the city have agreed to serve on the reception committee.

HENRY LAUB'S POLL SAYS SEBASTIAN WILL WIN.

Col. Henry Laub, who has won a reputation as an uncanny political prophet, declares that Sebastian will defeat Whiffen by better than two to one. Col. Laub prophesied the result of various phases of the election last fall and his guess on the recent primary showed the possession of reliable advance information.

The poll which he has taken in 250 of the 446 precincts of the city shows a straw vote for Sebastian of 24,250 and for Whiffen of 11,750.

"No expression in this poll was taken unless the voters themselves were interviewed in person and only bona fide voters were counted. The strength in many of the precincts for Sebastian was so startling that a band of expert canvassers will start out Monday to verify these reports," he said.

Methodists Quiz Councilmen.

The Methodist Ministers' Union has sent a catechism to each candidate for the Council. They ask each candidate to say if he will advocate eliminating fifty saloons each year until all are gone; if he will exercise stricter supervision of places of amusement for children; if he will segregate prisoners charged with misdemeanors from convicted felons; if he will establish a municipal rooming-house for unemployed; if he will provide municipal employment for persons out of work; if he will give liberally of the city's funds for public baths and playgrounds.

Boost for Mrs. Foltz.

At the Foltz headquarters, No. 621 South Hill street, last night, one of the really big rousing meetings of the campaign was held in the interest of Clara Shortridge Foltz for the Council. Mrs. Foltz has been making an effective campaign, and has thrown a real scare into a number of her men opponents by the apparent popularity of her candidacy. Last night's meeting was open to the public. Mrs. Foltz, ex-Senator Savage, Mrs. O. T. Helping and others spoke.

The Political Potpie.

President Whiffen and Chief Sebastian will speak at a joint rally of the Normal Hill Civic Center in the gymnasium of the old State Normal School next Saturday night. Chairman Lyons of the Public School Committee of 100 and I. J. Muma of the anti-Francis ticket will speak, and a number of Councilmanic candidates will have something to say.

Estelle Lawton Lindsey campaigned Friday in the San Fernando district and last night she spoke at three meetings, beginning with the Teamsters' Union at Burbank Hall. She awarded a baby prize at Labor Temple and later addressed a gathering at the Wednesday Morning Clubhouse. This morning she speaks in Van Nuys and this afternoon at Blanchard Hall.

At the union ministers' meeting at the Y.M.C.A. building tomorrow morning the two candidates for Mayor, Chief Sebastian and President Whiffen, will be given a close clerical inspection, following which an address will be delivered on "The Church and Social Redemption."

The Southern California Fuel Dealers' Association has taken a decided stand against the vehicle tax which has been placed on the ballot. They claim that the effect of the adoption of such a law will be to raise the cost of goods to consumers where delivery is free.

The Hollywood Board of Trade has become one of the livest political factors in the campaign. It is handling the candidacy of E. C. Hampton, the Hollywood aspirant for the Council. Yesterday Mr. Hampton gave the Palms a thorough canvass. Already he has covered every corner of the newly-annexed San Fernando district and will devote the coming week to the downtown district of Los Angeles.

Dr. Houghton, a candidate for the Council, is advocating an ordinance which would extend to veterans of all wars a 10 per cent. advantage in taking civil service examinations.

Instead of taking a drunken man to the police station, to the manifest embarrassment of himself and all his friends who see him in the patrol wagon, John Topham, a candidate for the Council, is advocating that the inebriates be taken to their homes instead.

WEST'S AD MEN DUE THIS WEEK.

HUNDREDS FROM DOZEN STATES COMING TO CONVENTION.

Expect Sessions Thursday, Friday and Saturday to be Biggest and Best in History of Pacific Coast Association—Many Trophies Offered for Visiting Clubs.

This will be advertising week in Los Angeles. Commencing Wednesday hundreds of advertising men from a dozen Western States will arrive here to attend the annual convention of the Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Wireless messages were received yesterday from the Seattle and Tacoma delegations, who are due Tuesday on the steamship President, that they are looking forward to the biggest and best convention in the association's history. Spokane, which is a contestant for the 1916 meeting, is also sending a large delegation.

A patrol of 100 members of the Los Angeles Advertising Club, in white serge suits, will meet the visiting publicity men and escort them to their various hotels. Beginning Thursday morning business sessions will occupy the attention of the visitors until Friday afternoon, and a special invitation has been issued by the Advertising Club of Los Angeles to the business men of Los Angeles to attend these sessions and avail themselves of the opportunity to hear some of the biggest and brainiest advertising men in the United States in business discussions. Papers will be read covering every phase of business activity, real estate and store advertising, retail publicity, community advertising and newspapers.

President R. L. Bisby of the Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association and a member of the Advertising Club of Los Angeles, has offered a magnificent $100 trophy cup to the advertising club maintaining the largest attendance at all the sessions, and five other trophy cups have been offered as special awards to be made to the visiting clubs making the best exhibit in newspaper advertising, for the largest delegation visiting the convention, for the greatest mileage covered in coming to the convention and for the best individual advertising campaign during 1914. One of these cups is the largest silver trophy ever offered at any convention, standing nearly four feet in height, and will be presented to the advertising club attending this convention that has accomplished most for the best interests of advertising and for bigger and better business during 1914.

After a fifty-mile automobile trip through the orange groves and residence sections, and a visit to the "Mission Play" Saturday evening, the delegates will be conveyed by special train Sunday morning to San Diego, where an elaborate programme has been provided for by the Panama-California Exposition management and the Advertising Club of that city. A large delegation of local business men and advertising men will accompany the visiting delegates on this southern trip.

PINE TREE ENTERTAINMENT.

"The War Brides," by Marion Craig Wentworth, will be read by the students of the Wallis School of Dramatic Art before the Pine Tree State Association next Tuesday evening at their first meeting in The Times Assembly Hall, First and Broadway. Musical numbers will be contributed by Bob Howard, violinist; Miss Jessie York and Earl Wentz, soloists, and Mrs. Gertrude McConnaughey Powers, pianist. All State of Maine people, resident or tourist, and friends are invited. Plans will be made for the annual picnic to occur the second Saturday in June at Sycamore Park. Dr. Frank D. Bullard is president, and Miss Josephine M. Scott, secretary, of the association.

Headed for a Prize.

NINE WORKING AUNTS ON TAP.

How One Trade Contestant Means to Win.

She Shows Great Proof of Much Prosperity.

Others Also Raise Their Standing.

Wouldn't it be nice to have nine aunts—nine working aunts—nine aunts all willing to help one win a prize in the Prosperity and Trade Contest? I have never given much thought to the subject of aunts until yesterday, but since then they have been on my mind almost continually—and all because of a remark made by one of the contestants.

Burnett McIrvin,

A Prosperity and Trade contestant, who is proving that the contest is not for "ladies only."

It happened this way: one of the contestants, who has been making only a fair showing in the contest, came in yesterday with two suit cases packed full of an assortment of credits that would have stocked a fair-sized novelty bazaar. And how they did run up into big figures. My! My! Over 1,000,000 credits—yes, over 1,000,000. More than that, Miss Florence Doty—there, I did not mean to let the name slip—assures us that some day this week she is going to bring in a collection of flour sacks, coffee cans, Sego Milk cans, Hydro Pura boxes, receipted bills, etc., that will aggregate over 6,000,000. Still more about this surprising contestant—she has so many credits to bring in, that the only way to get them here in one swoop, is to have them brought in a dray and that is exactly what she is going to do.

The entire contest force literally gasped for breath, but some one managed to inquire, more forcibly than elegantly, "For Pete's sake, how did you get them all?" and right here is where the nine aunts come in. With a justifiable air of pride, this wise little contestant remarked, "Why, I have nine aunts and they are all working for me. They are all small and I am going to run that automobile myself and take every one of them out riding every time I go." They have all been collecting for weeks the credits that had no time limit, and this is the result. Besides, my father has been helping me, too."

The contest force, separately and collectively, wish from the bottom of their hearts, that they had nine aunts, each, to help count those credits, when they come in. Practically all of the Los Angeles co-operating merchants are represented in this dray load of credits and many of the out-of-town merchants, for some of the aunts live in the suburban towns. One aunt in Claremont sends in slips from Fallis's Cash Grocery, Duvall's Book and Drug Store, Claremont Hardware and Claremont Department Store. Another aunt, living in Covina, contributes slips from Broadwell's Dry Good Store, The Rexall Store, Henry-Hall Hardware House and Chaffee's Cash Grocery.

Frank L. Coe, Jr.,

Who is a Prosperity seeker in the Trade Contest.

A great many of the Murray Baking Company's wrappers were among the special credits, as well as slips from Ye Sign of Ye Orange Blossom, the New Method Laundry, F. E. Newberry Electric Company, and the West First Street Department Store.

Quite a number of the "lazy" contestants have come to life this past week and, therefore, will not be dropped from the list, but there are plenty of others who need waking up. If you think you are too far back on the list to start in now, why not help some other contestant? But do not be too sure that you are not still in the running. Some of the highest contestants did not start in until two or three weeks ago. They figure their chances all out carefully and make every minute of their work count. Come in, you discouraged ones—as well as you lazy ones—and let us tell you how to do likewise.

You ought to see the Sego Milk cans and labels that come pouring in these days. It almost makes one believe that people water their gardens raise god potatoes at that, so with Sego Milk—I'll wager it would great is the number of labels turned in. A dear little lady called the other day with some credits for her daughter, a great many of which were Sego Milk labels, and informed us that she never thought that she could ever drink her coffee with canned cream, but "Billie" said they must use Sego, to get the credits and "Now," she added, "I'll never use any thing else."

Get busy, everybody, you will have an awful lot of fun, even if you do not win anything. There is nothing in the world that will make one so happy as optimism—and work.

BELL TOLLED BY HIS FOREFATHER.

IMPENDING VISIT OF LIBERTY RELIC REVEALS HURRY'S DESCENDANT HERE.

When it reaches Los Angeles, the famous old Liberty Bell may recognize the spirit of an old friend, the connecting link with its famous day in history, in the person of C. L. Peebles, direct descendant of William Hurry, the bellringer, who tolled out the message of freedom on Independence Day, 1776, back in Philadelphia.

The grave of the illustrious Hurry was for years lost but came to light in 1905, when the sexton of the old Pine-street Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, in clearing up a few of the neglected headstones in the abandoned cemetery adjacent to the church, came across the name of Hurry. Only the fact that the bell is coming to Los Angeles disclosed that one of his direct descendants resides in Southern California. Had it not been for this, few persons would ever have known about Mr. Peebles of No. 1417 Sunset boulevard and his famed progenitor.

The old tombstone had for its inscription the words:

"In Memory of William Hurry
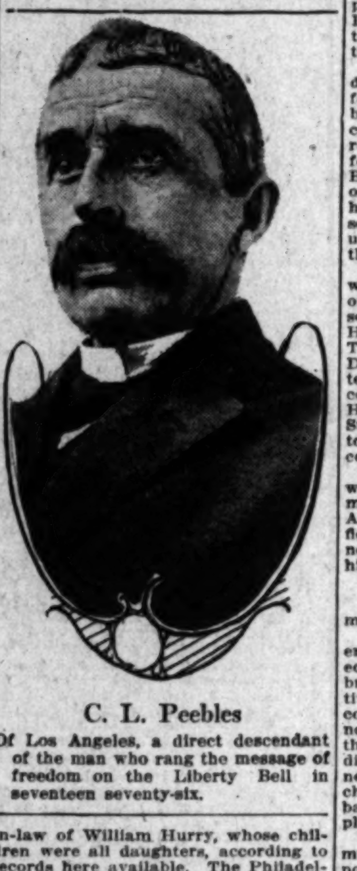
Who Departed This Life
October 22, 1781.
Aged 60 years and 2 months;
Also Titus Owens
Who Departed this Life
August 12, 1880.
Aged 26 years and 6 month;
Also Margaret, his Daughter,
Who died July 24, 1800,
Aged 18 months."

Titus Owens was one of the sons-in-law of William Hurry, whose children were all daughters, according to records here available. The Philadelphia Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, had a suitable monument erected over the grave of the bellringer, which today is the point of attraction for many tourists.



C. L. Peebles

Of Los Angeles, a direct descendant of the man who rang the message of freedom on the Liberty Bell in seventeen seventy-six.

A rather remarkable family trait is that through the years past, there have been very few sons among the descendants of Hurry, the local Mr. Peebles being one of the few exceptions. His great-grandmother was Sara Ann Stetler, named after her grandmother, Sara Ann Hurry. Miss Stetler, whose brother was a religious writer and speaker of some note in the middle part of last century, married a Mr. Norris. A daughter of the match was Margaret Norris, who married J. M. Peebles, father of the local man.

C. L. Peebles is a former druggist, having come here from Ogden several years ago and having lived in retirement since that time. He has three daughters, Mrs. Robert Daniels, Mrs. Reginald Clapp and Mrs. Edward Colburn. Their children, with the exception of a son of Mrs. Daniels, are daughters.

The Chamber of Commerce is trying to arrange to have Mr. Peebles and his grandson, Mr. Daniels, ride with the Liberty Bell when it reaches here next fall, thus linking as closely as possible the present day with the glorious history of the nation's infancy.

POLY ALUMNI TO MEET.

Graduates and Former Students will Gather Wednesday for Big Time at Their Alma Mater.

The Polytechnic High School Alumni Association will hold their annual reunion and banquet at the Polytechnic High School Wednesday, in which much interest and general response is being taken. A reception to Supt. Francis and teachers of the Polytechnic High School will be tendered at 4:30 o'clock p.m., and a banquet will be served by the high school pupils at 6:30 o'clock. A fine programme and address by Supt. Francis will be held in the auditorium at 8:30 o'clock.

All former members of the student body, even if not graduates, are cordially invited to be present at the auditorium meeting.

UNDELIVERED TELEGRAMS.

There are telegrams at the Western Union for P. S. Baker, J. E. Edwards, Mrs. Olga Grant, Louis Henry, John Menzie, Alex Methivier, E. D. Mooney, O. P. Posey, Chas. S. Sprague, Mrs. Helen G. Van Upp and Chas. K. Wheeler; at the Postal Mrs. Wm. McNabb, J. C. Rainwater Lumber Co., V. E. Sheets, Donald M. Chapman, Mr. H. W. Hobbs, G. M. C. Raymond, Grex, C. E. More Arrests Yet Expected by Police Inspector.

Offer of Help is Given by District Attorney.

Continuing the investigation of the alleged lottery ring which is believed to have been operating here for months without fear of interruption, detectives from the office of Inspector Home of the police department yesterday afternoon arrested another "agent" and locked him in the City Jail on suspicion of a felony. He is Edward Lower, who was taken from his home, No. 1307 West Pico street. His bail was fixed at $500 and he was unable to furnish it.

When the officers raided Lower's home they found a large number of lottery tickets and paraphernalia used in the sale of them. This will be turned over to the United States District Attorney's office tomorrow and it is expected a Federal complaint will be issued against the man.

Lower is said to have confessed to Inspector Home that he has been engaged in the lottery business and that he knew all along that Larry Sullivan, former detective in the employ of the County District Attorney's office, had some connection with the local ring. He said, however, that he never met Sullivan personally.

EXPECTS MORE ARRESTS.

Inspector Home stated last night that several more important arrests will be made during the next few days and that the evidence against Sullivan, W. J. Danford, W. H. H. Young, the "lottery king," Arthur Daniels and others is becoming stronger every hour. That some well-known men high up in official circles will be implicated in the investigation Inspector Home said is certain, and a sensational arrest may be made at any time.

Strenuous efforts were made yesterday by Larry Sullivan and W. J. Danford, the disbarred attorney, to secure bail, which is fixed at $3500 in each case. Neither succeeded in finding responsible citizens who would vouch for their appearance in the Federal Building next Saturday. Sullivan offered to put up $3500 in cash, but he was told that his bonds must be secured by two citizens of good reputation, and he was unable to find them.

Yesterday morning Danford sent word to the County District Attorney's office that he wanted to see a representative of that office and Secretary Hartson of the county grand jury. The latter, accompanied by Deputy District Attorney Keyes, went to interview him. They reported he had a complaint to make against the police. He said the officers at Central Police Station refused to let him see an attorney after his arrest Friday. His complaint was given no consideration.

During the day Dist.-Atty. Woolwine sent letters to the police department and the United States District Attorney requesting that he be notified if there is any evidence in connection with the lottery case which his office should take up.

WOOLWINE'S STATEMENT.

He also made the following statement for publication:

"Larry Sullivan was at one time employed as a detective by my predecessor, and was employed by me for brief periods as an emergency detective and such employment was discontinued March 15, 1915, and he has not done any work of any nature for this office since that time. He never did any work of any nature in connection with the so-called Serkin charges against Chief of Police Sebastian. Larry Sullivan was also employed by E. T. Earl as a detective.

"I have this day addressed a communication to Inspector Home of the police department and also the United States District Attorney, calling upon them to produce any evidence or information they may have, or may secure, as to any violation of any State law against the said Sullivan or any other person involved in the so-called lottery scheme or any other matter.

"I shall also co-operate in every way possible with the police authorities and with the United States Attorney's office in the prosecution of all persons involved in any such scheme.

"The District Attorney's office has no jurisdiction of lotteries conducted in the city of Los Angeles; that would come within the jurisdiction of the City Prosecutor, being a misdemeanor, but it has jurisdiction of any fraud growing out of any such scheme where the amount involved exceeds $50."

Attorneys who were in the office of former Dist.-Atty. Fredericks stated last night that Larry Sullivan was discharged from that office nearly three years ago.

Information from San Francisco last night was that none of the men against whom complaints were issued here by the United States District Attorney's office had been apprehended. The dispatch further stated no demand had been made upon the officials there to arrest them. This was explained by Postoffice Inspector Webster as being possibly the method employed by the officers in the north in keeping from the public what their office is doing.

ONE TO SURRENDER, ANOTHER IS IN HIDING.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—Louis Fitzpatrick, one of four men in this part of the State wanted in connection with the Los Angeles lottery cases, was almost, but not quite, arrested today. Fitzpatrick, according to friends, has promised United States Deputy Marshal Mulhall to surrender himself Monday. He wants until then to arrange for bonds. At least, that is what he is understood to have told Mr. Mulhall this afternoon.

The deputy marshal is reported to have telephoned to Fitzpatrick here from Oakland, by arrangement made by friends of the latter. Mr. Mulhall informed Fitzpatrick a warrant was out for his arrest and Fitzpatrick agreed to meet the officer in this city, Monday.

Louis Schobe, another of the quartette, who formerly resided at the Royal Hotel in Oakland, has gone into hiding. He is said to be awaiting the outcome of the case against Fitzpatrick.

LICENSED IN NORTH.

Marriage licenses were issued in San Francisco yesterday to Herbert B. Harpold, 35, Seattle, and Julia Lovett, 28, Los Angeles; Frank N. Youngblood, 30, Alvarado, Alameda county, and Nell W. Walker, 30, Long Beach.

GIRL MAY DIE OF TERRIBLE SCALDS.

CHILD AT PLAY TUMBLES INTO BOILING WATER; LITTLE HOPE FOR HER.

Stumbling backward while tossing a ball to her pet kitten, Nora Roberts, 9 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Roberts, No. 731 New High street, fell into a tub of boiling water yesterday and was probably fatally scalded. Practically all of the skin of her back and legs peeled off soon after she was removed to the Receiving Hospital.

With her mother, the child was in the back yard playing with her kitten. Mrs. Roberts was washing clothes, and after filling a tub with boiling water, warned the child not to get too close. "All right, mama, I'll be careful," the little girl answered, but just then the ball she had been bouncing to the cat fell in the direction of the tub. In rushing backward to catch the ball she stumbled.

Mrs. Roberts dashed to the aid of the child, but before she was lifted from the tub, Nora was so seriously burned that physicians have little hope for her recovery. Nearly half the skin of her body came off.

Delirious from the intense pain and not knowing that she was being taken to the hospital, the child kept calling pitifully for her cat.

INNER WHEEL OF LITIGATION.

IMPERIAL MELON CLAIMANTS SUE THEIR ATTORNEY.

Japanese Growers Ask Federal Court to Prevent Settlement or Delay of Cases and to Enforce Division of Money Secured on Fifty Per Cent. Basis.

An action quite out of the ordinary, involving recent litigation on the subject of the alleged violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Law, and the melon interests in Imperial county, was filed in the United States District Court yesterday.

The orators in the cause are T. Saitow, S. Monijama, T. Abe, I. Iisuki, K. Tano and N. Kida, against George Kunihiro and Edward Byrnes. All the parties are Japanese, the orators being melon growers, and Byrnes, an attorney of Chicago.

It is alleged that the orators, representing 80 per cent. of the melon growers of Imperial county, assigned certain rights in an action against certain distributors of melons, to the defendants; and that in the seasons of 1908-1909-1910-1911-1912-1913 and 1914, the melon growers employed as commission merchants for the handling of their crops, the Lyons Bros., Arthur Miller, M. O. Coggins Company, Clifford A. Coggins, C. Swift Follens, Mutual Distribution Company, Adolph Levy, Edward S. Armstrong, Frank E. Wagner, William L. Wagner, Charles H. Weaver, Charles A. Weaver, L. Bernard Kilbourne, William F. Morpf, Ira Dodge Hale, James S. Crutchfield, Robert B. Woolfolk, Peter P. Hovley, Western Cantalope Exchange, Joseph Friedheim, Duncan Campbell Company, A. G. Kohnhorst and the United Marketing Company.

It is further alleged that in 1912 Byrnes being familiar with the growing and marketing of melons in Imperial county discovered that the distributors had entered into a secret and unlawful combination in restraint of trade and that the distributors had retained commissions, rebates, freight charges and claims paid by the railroads for melons lost or damaged in transit. It was alleged that the business of the growers had been injured to the extent of $556,000, and that the moneys retained by the distributors from the growers was estimated at $498,000.

In 1912, it is charged, Byrnes employed Kunihiro to procure from the growers an authorization to bring action in the name of Kunihiro, and to employ Byrnes to bring an action. Assignments were secured, and it is said many of the blanks were not signed, but were subsequently filled out by Kunihiro or his agent.

On December 3, 1912, it is alleged that Kunihiro and Byrnes secured a contract by which they were to receive 50 per cent. of all moneys secured as a result of the suit, and it is now assertd that they claim to be the sole owners of the cause of action to them assigned.

A suit was filed in the Superior Court of Los Angeles county in June, 1913, against the distributors, requiring an accounting from the defendants and asking for a judgment of $498,000. It is asserted that the suit was allowed to lie dormant and no action was begun to enforce the collection.

The gist of the long complaint is that it is charged the defendants intend to compromise and settle the actions for far less than the sum demanded in the petitions; that the matter is being delayed so that the statute of limitation may run and defeat justice. It is also charged that the defendants are not worth to exceed $25,000, and that all of the property of Byrnes is in the name of another.

The prayer of the petition is that the court find the defendants were insolvent at the time of the filing of the bill; that they be required to account for the property that has come into their hands; that the defendants hold the assignments of the growers for collection only; that they be restrained from compromising the proceedings against the producers, and that the money collected as a result of the suits be divided.

"LOVE IS BLIND."

So Man Says Who Went to Bid Girl Goodbye and Was Arrested for Trespassing—Suspended Fine.

Pleading that "love is blind" as his excuse for trespassing on the property of Mrs. M. S. Glass, William Jenkins asked for leniency in the Police Court yesterday morning and he was given a suspended sentence of ninety days with the restriction that he go back to Pasadena and stay there. "If in the next two years you are seen in the vicinity of this woman's home, you will be locked up and compelled to serve the full sentence," the judge stated.

Jenkins said that he had been keeping company with a young woman, who lives with Mrs. Glass, who had told him to "stay off," and he could not resist the temptation yesterday morning to go in the house and bid her goodbye before returning to his job in the Crown City.

Stopping association football in Great Britain until after the war will, it is estimated, mean a loss of $5,000,000 in wages to players.

Fact and Comment.

and hardships resulting from many special assessment proceedings in this city can fail to desire a change which will lead to a more systematic and equitable arrangement for the carrying out of public improvements. Notorious among recent instances was that of Exposition Park, in which a limited number of property owners in an assessment district in southwest Los Angeles were compelled to make sacrifices in order that a great playground and educational center, maintained jointly by the State, County and City, might be enlarged. The condemnation of additional ground for Exposition Park, if any extra acreage was really needed, was as much the concern of Highland Park, the Wilshire district and Boyle Heights as it was of the hard-hit section that actually had to foot the bill. Multiplied instances in which those who could ill afford to meet heavy special assessments have been forced to pay for improvements of more or less general benefit might be cited.

There have been times when the special assessment has been a good thing and when it has provided the means for carrying out needed improvements that would otherwise have been delayed indefinitely. It does not always involve the hardships that have made it so generally unpopular. Important improvements without number have been made possible in different districts by the provisions of the Vrooman act and many of these have been in neighborhoods that could well afford the expense. The big injustice has always resulted from attempts to put through huge projects of general importance at the expense of arbitrarily laid out districts.

Too Many "Axes."

A great deal of the evil resulting from special assessments has been due to the pulling and hauling between different sections of the city. Los Angeles, it must be confessed, is lacking that kind of public spirit which would subordinate the interests of localities to that of the city at large. Various groups of owners and promoters are everlastingly trying to pull the business district and centers of residence development this way and that, ready at all time to fight the public project that would directly benefit any other section than their own and to bring pressure to bear to conserve their own ends. It has been impossible, on account of such selfish short-sighted and unpatriotic influences in Los Angeles, to get some of the most important public improvements through in any other way than by special assessments upon individual districts.

If Los Angeles as a city is to grow and progress on logical lines of development many great public improvements affecting directly this or that particular quarter of the city and indirectly, but vitally, the entire city, will have to be carried out. It is high time that some of these enterprises were being taken up. In this connection, it is important that the question of special assessments should at once be given that careful and intelligent consideration which candidates for city offices are always faithfully promising to give it, but which it has never yet received. Special assessments should be made the subject for something besides campaign talk. A new broad guage policy for public improvement procedures should be adopted at the earliest possible moment. The man with the axe to grind should be made to take a back seat. Los Angeles people as a whole are able and willing to pay their share toward the cost of all public improvements that benefit the community at large and which are really needed. This being true, it ought to be entirely feasible to work out a plan by which the burden of future public projects can be more equitably distributed. To the Fact and Comment man it appears that the East Seventh-street viaduct proceedings are a step in the right direction.

GET CHURCH AWARD.

Architects Elmore R. Jeffery and F. R. Schaefer of this city have been commissioned to prepare plans for a large brick house of worship, to be erected at San Bernardino by the First Congregational Church of that place. The edifice will be of Mission design and will contain a main auditorium seating about 500, together with a Sunday-school assembly-room for 250. The cost of the building is estimated at $50,000.

SUBURBAN DEVELOPMENT.

A tract of seventy acres lying near the center of the town of Compton is being formally opened to the market today by the Campbell-Bentley Company. The land has been platted into small farm plots and is to be developed as a suburban tract for home builders who wish ground space for gardening and poultry raising. The subdivision is supplied with gas, water and electricity.

JOINT SERVICE MEMORIAL DAY.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS AND AUXILIARIES COMPLETE THEIR ARRANGEMENTS.

All plans for the joint observance of Memorial Day by the camps of the U.S.W.V., were completed yesterday and final arrangements made for the services the afternoon of the 31st inst., at the Bible Institute. This will be a joint service of the G.A.R., and the U.S.W.V., and will begin at 1:30 o'clock.

Next Sunday the camps and auxiliaries, with the G.A.R. and affiliated bodies, will assemble at the Broadway entrance to the Hall of Records, at 10 o'clock, and march to St. Vibiana's Cathedral, where special services will be held and a memorial address will be delivered by Bishop T. Conaty.

On Memorial Day the camps and auxiliaries will assemble at the Washington street entrance to Rosedale Cemetery at 9:30 o'clock and in conjunction with military academies and school children, will march to Roosevelt Camp's Plot and Spanish War Veterans' Monument, where an appropriate programme will be rendered.

At 1 o'clock all camps and auxiliaries will assemble, with colors, at Sixth and Olive streets, and march to the Bible Institute on Hope street, where patriotic exercises will be held under the auspices of the General Memorial Day Committee.

H. V. Parker has been selected as grand marshal for the Bible Institute services. He will call the assembly to order and then introduce Harry Harrison as chairman of the day. The programme will include a selection by the drum corps, invocation by O. J. Nave, chaplain-in-chief of the G.A.R., the reading of Logan's Order by Joe Palmer and of Lincoln's Gettysburg address by Judge Shenk, and an address by Dr. L. W. Munhall of Philadelphia.

COMMERCIAL.

Shipment of local potatoes in car lots has been started during the past few days. Nevada, Montana, Arizona and Utah are the principal States calling for this stock now. Owing to a probable shortage in the Texas crop of spuds, a good demand from there is expected a little later on, in time to take up any surplus that may arise with the early harvesting of the northern potatoes. It is reported that acreage and crop will be about the same in the Sacramento and Stockton River districts this year as last. The first spuds to ripen in that territory will be ready for market in about three weeks. As a result, local potatoes will be largely governed after that time by prices established in the north. New spuds are bringing anywhere from 60 to 80 cents a lug box according to quality, very few going at the top figure. Receipts yesterday were 125 sacks.

There was no change here or in the north on butter, eggs or cheese. Receipts of eggs were 619 cases. Weakness here is partially due to the fact that dealers are not putting heavy stocks into storage. Butter is quiet and featureless at this time. Receipts were 62,020 pounds. Cheese arrivals were 2660 pounds.

Onions are very plentiful and prices stick at 90 cents on Bermudas and a little better on Chrystal Whites. Receipts were 640 crates. The decline and weak market in beans is due to the heavy holdings still in the hands of producers whose high figures have caused curtailment of consumption. Receipts were 490 sacks.

Apple arrivals were 641 boxes. With peaches, apricots, cherries, cantaloupes, all varieties of berries and a few other fruits on the market, the season can be said to be well started. There were no changes in this list yesterday and Monday is expected to see heavier arrivals in all lines.

Financial Review.

HESITATING ATTITUDE OF THE STOCK MARKET.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 22.—The week's stock speculation adopted a hesitating attitude, Germany's reply to the protest of the United States being the event awaited. Even Italy's decision in favor of war was construed as a probable factor of delay by Germany. A market contraction in dealings and some covering of short contracts marked the speculative pause, but prices were lifted again in the final session, war stocks being the most active and strong.

The commanding credit position of the United States received further demonstration in the responses to the week's news.

Foreign exchange rates at New York sank to low levels on all financial centers, quotations to London being the lowest since 1873, and francs and lires being recorded at minimum figures of many years. In fact, rates on Paris and Rome were lower than at any time within the recollection of veteran dealers.

France's $100,000,000 gold transfer to the Bank of England, with establishment of a $300,000,000 credit, was utilized to remit gold to New York from Ottawa. Additional gold direct from France and a shipment from Japan were also announced, but the feeling grows that new and larger credits will have to be placed here if foreign exchange is not to become utterly demoralized.

Foreign sales of American securities still press on the New York market, but without appreciable effect, although international bonds at times moved heavily. New South American credits were sought here with negotiations still in progress.

Reports show but slight effect on placing of orders in any industry because of a chance of rupture with Germany. In fact, the United States Steel Corporation's output at this time is over 75 per cent. of capacity, compared to 40 per cent. early in the year.

Winter wheat shows severe deterioration in certain sections, but nothing short of extraordinary weather conditions is likely to prevent an enormous yield of this and other foodstuffs.

Indefinite prolongation of the war seemed to be the prospect read in the military news by dispassionate observers.

WHEAT PRICES AGAIN TUMBLE.

ACTION BY ITALY IS FELT IN CHICAGO MARKET.

Stand by King Victor Emmanuel Reflected in Prices at Chicago. Corn Advances and then Recedes, While Provisions Lack Support. Close is Unsettled.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, May 22.—Action of King Victor Emmanuel, which seemed to imply that Italy regarded herself as already at war, made wheat prices tumble today notwithstanding an early advance. There was an unsettled close, 1⅛ to 1½ under last night. Corn finished ⅜ to ¾ down, oats ⅝ off to ⅛ up, and provisions at 2½ to 12½ decline. Corn advanced and then receded in company with wheat. Oats proved relatively firmer than corn. Provisions lacked support.

INY MAXWELL "25" TOWS HEAVY STEAMER CABRILLO AT HARBOR.

L.A.A.C. Takes Meet.

ED KELLY EQUALS NATIONAL RECORD IN LOW HURDLE RACE.

BY AD G. WADDELL.

[illegible] by four quarter-milers [illegible] uniform, and an- [illegible] quartette bedecked [illegible] most popular around [illegible] College, the Los Angeles [illegible] gang won the annual [illegible] meet yesterday.

[illegible] count was locked up in [illegible]. Before the sensational [illegible], U.S.C. was in front [illegible] L.A.A.C. joy army a few [illegible]. To win the meet, [illegible] to take at least second [illegible]. It could not be done. [illegible] and Occidental slipped [illegible] of the U.S.C. crowd and the [illegible] to the club with a total [illegible] tallies.

[illegible] the Trojan side of [illegible] it was announced that [illegible] proteges were just two [illegible], with a total of 39. Long [illegible] down in third place [illegible].

[illegible] ACTION.

[illegible] "party" meet. There [illegible] with some record- [illegible] performances on the side. [illegible] failed to shine; but [illegible] ran true to form. [illegible] whistles blew for 6 [illegible], Charles Borgstrom, [illegible] U.S.C. athlete, was still [illegible] a bar, more than [illegible] the air, for the glory [illegible] L.A.A.C.

[illegible]ELLY'S MARK.

[illegible] was also in the cast [illegible] Yard yesterday. He [illegible] hurdle events and stack- [illegible] fifty-fifty basis with the [illegible] in the low bar- [illegible] track, at the rate [illegible].

[illegible] Drew romped [illegible] the sprints, taking said [illegible] as much effort as [illegible] in passing out [illegible].

[illegible] A CHANCE.

[illegible] meet there were several [illegible] boys, freshmen at [illegible] exhibiting fear that [illegible] trimmed by young [illegible] Arts or V. Mur- [illegible]. Lamport failed to [illegible] took a fair second. [illegible] the time of his young [illegible] a two-inch decision [illegible], the old-timer [illegible] who was wearing [illegible] of the athletic club. [illegible] freshman, rated [illegible] in the [illegible] place, but no [illegible] stick around and [illegible] it was. A rough guess would make it about sixtieth.

The well-touted Kip Lupher, another Occidental freshman, failed to place in the 100-yard dash, as did likewise many others, including "Blondy" Given of Pomona and "Fat" Art Coover of the L.A.A.C.

GENTLEMEN ABSENT.

Several of the stars did not appear, much to the disappointment of some and the joy of others. The brothers Sturges of Pomona simply failed to show. Capt. La Follette of the same institution missed the car. Some of the gentlemen listed for the events pulled a canary after they saw some of the action on the field; but there were others, old-timers at that, who stayed in the party until the chairs began to go on the tables, preparatory to the advent of the moppers.

Fisher, the old Pomona star, took unto himself the very best place in the two-mile race. A youngster from the athletic club led out and old man Fisher with his bald head and his wrinkled brow, looked too overworked to come back; but he did and romped over the finish ahead of Crippen, the Polytechnic star. He took home the gold medal with 10m. 27 3-5s. engraved on the back.

The time in the mile was slow and it was a very ladylike race. Bill Annin did not overwork young Crippen much in the early laps and when the prep miler tried to pass him on the last half lap he almost put it over. But Annin decided that he might as well get in before dark, so stepped out and finished in 4m. 48s.

GATES FLIVVERS.

There was one great finish tacked onto the quarter. There were a dozen or more likely looking athletes lined up for the start. Mr. Gates of the Athletic Club tore off a few yards of fast stuff from the gun and had the race won at the start into the last 220 yards. He started to sprint too soon and became groggy in the last ten paces. Young Conn of Pasadena stepped under the wire a winner.

Beal of Stanford, one of the fastest gents on the campus, finished second and Gates rolled in third. All the class in the intercollegiate south went down the line, whispering mournful melodies. It may be that the Southern California College boys were kidding each other and did not want to exert themselves in the quarter.

V. Murray of Whittier and his brother, Earl, made a talk to Mr. Seward A. Simons, commanding officers of everything A.A.U., in this section, claiming that Conn had fouled brother V. Murray on the turn. Mr. Simons spoke through his megaphone and told the brothers Murray of Whittier to stand back. He then sent a messenger to locate the inspector but Murray never lifted a place on the grounds of a foul.

JAVLIN.

Two representatives from Long Beach captured most of the glory in the javlin throw. Bev Anderson, football captain-elect down at Long Beach, threw the spear almost to the far end of the yard and won first. Les Wark of the same school, ran around barefoot for about a half hour, emulating the chief down at the Igorrote Village, and was finally successful in staying behind the line, and consequently was elected to second honors. Wark wore off most of the skin on the bottoms of his feet, but he didn't care, as it will all go in his expense account.

Pellican Thompson of Occidental won third with the javlin. He should have had first only the Long Beach boys threw the spear too far for him.

KELLY DOESN'T PLACE.

Fred Kelly and a lot of regular athletes tried their luck with the javlin, but their acts failed to get over. Kelly says that he is going down to the Igorrote Village and have old Chief Chi Chi Owna show him the real spear throwing form.

Jack Elmore of U.S.C. tried to toss the stabber, but had worse luck than Kelly. Elmore says that the only objection to the javlin is the chalk line. If he did not have to stop suddenly, he could run down by the football goal posts and throw the javlin over the fence.

That would also assist the officials as they could just measure to the fence and give medals to all the boys who threw the spear over. Ben Ward of the Athletic Club suggested that silver medals to the men who stick the javlin in the fence.

NEW MARK.

Bonnett of Stanford donated a new record to Southern California in the half-mile, finishing the distance in 1m. 58 2-5s. Adkinson, the Pomona freshman, did second in 2m. 4-5s. Old Capt. Tipton of U.S.C. came through with a point. Tip ran a good race in fast company and took a good third. There were more than three men in the race, too.

There was a lot of class in the high hurdles. Kelly got away bad and about the middle of the race his chances were worth something like 15 cents. Ben Wark had the big lead but at the sixth hurdle lost a shoe. Harry Kirkpatrick then took the lead and was run down by Kelly but a few feet from the last hurdle. V. Murray of Whittier landed in third

SUNSET BALL TEAM SMACKS ALL-STARS.

The Sunset Athletic Club defeated the Hollywood All-Stars yesterday afternoon by a score of 5 to 3. Beck and Monroe were the batteries for the Sunset aggregation and Sherman and Christe performed the ceremonies for the Hollywood squad. Hollywood succeeded in securing three runs, seven hits and three errors. Sunset was blessed with five runs, nine hits and no errors.

In Form.

VENICE WINS ONE AT LAST.

Breaks Long List of Defeats by Beating Beavers.

Ellis Johnson Works in Championship Form.

Berger and Kane Power Behind the Runs.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Following six straight defeats, the Venice club yesterday got back into the winning column with a 3-to-0 victory over Portland.

Acting Manager Bayless had the men hustling all the way, and their work showed an improvement in every department. Indications are that they will soon be back in their regular stride.

TOP FORM.

Ellis Johnson was in top form, and was accorded perfect support. The seven hits made off his delivery were scattered an inning or more apart except in the fifth, when the Beavers bunched two ineffectual singles. Not a visitor reached third base, and only two attained second. Johnson's speed was excellent and his spitter was working nicely, while his control was about all that could be desired.

ERROR COSTS RUN.

Rube Evans, while somewhat unsteady, was not hit effectively except in the third and fifth. His support was fine most of the way, but the single Portland error cost a run. Bates supplied the fielding feature of the game in the seventh, when he speared Risberg's grounder with one hand, cutting off what looked to be a sure base hit.

Kane was back in center field, and gave a good account of himself with two singles and a stolen base. Berger's hitting also was hard and timely. Stumpf did most of the heavy work for Portland, getting three successive singles, but there was so little hitting behind or in front of him that his blows stood for only a few additional points to his batting percentage.

A BOUNCER.

Mitze opened the second by bouncing a single over Bates. He was forced by Johnson, who attempted to sacrifice. Carlisle advanced Johnson to second with a single to right. Berg-

STURDY STUTZ SMASHES MARK.

Romps Across Continent in Eleven Days

With Only One Man Driving the Car.

Knocks Four Days from the Old Record.

The morning of May 7, Erwin G. Baker, in a stock model Stutz Bearcat, left San Diego with the determination to drive to New York in twelve days. He arrived in New York the morning of May 18, just eleven days, seven hours and fifteen minutes across the American continent—a distance of 3725 miles, or an average of 330 miles per day.

The former record for an automobile was fifteen days and twelve hours, made with six men driving relays day and night. Baker chopped off four days and five hours, driving every foot of the distance himself, almost one-third of the former record.

Leaving San Diego, Baker drove his Stutz over some of the roughest country in the entire Southwest, into Phoenix, Ariz., a distance of 469 miles in the remarkable time of fifteen hours, breaking all former records between these two places. The second day he drove from Phoenix to El Paso, a distance of 532 miles, making 1001 miles in two days of travel, a feat never before heard of for cross-country travel. Leaving El Paso, he ran into rain and Texas clay. Through Kansas, where Baker made the least mileage, he struck rain and thick Kansas mud. The rest of the journey was fair, with the exception of rain and slippery going through the mountains of Pennsylvania.

Baker was well-known along the entire course and throngs of people were out to see him go through. At Indianapolis, Baker's home town, and incidentally the home of the Stutz, a big ovation was given. At New York, a delegation of automobiles and enthusiasts met Baker in New Jersey and accorded him a triumphal entry in the big city.

Baker was accompanied by R. G. Sturm, a newspaper man of Indianapolis, who was appointed observer by the Automobile Association of America. This made the record official, and as Baker checked in at practically every town of prominence, the record will stand unquestioned. As Baker did all the work in connection with cranking, filling with oil and gasoline, himself, the record is strictly a one-man drive from ocean to ocean.

In passing through cities and towns it was necessary to comply with local speed laws, and Baker was only stopped once for running without a rear license pad. The constable was appeased, however, and the Stutz continued on her journey. Three nail punctures were encountered, and the tubes changed, consequently the car went the entire distance on the original tires. In going through Kansas, heavy chuck holes full of mud were encountered and one of these broke the two front shock absorbers; a delay of several hours was made to remedy this trouble. Aside from this no mechanical trouble of any consequence was encountered. A pretty clean record for the sturdy Stutz.

A jitney bus was used as an ambulance in Baltimore recently, when it removed a boy who had been bitten by a dog to the hospital. The lad seemed elated because he was the first person to be taken to a hospital in a jitney.

Some Trip.

NEW EIGHT IS DRIVEN ALL THE WAY FROM MIAMI.

FOUR thousand, one hundred and fifty miles without so much as steaming the water, is the record made by J. P. Apple and family, who arrived in Los Angeles last week in a Cadillac Eight, after driving from Miami, Fla.

This transcontinental trip was made over a route seldom traveled by motorists and at the worst season of the year. Accompanying Apple was his wife, daughter, Miss Velda Linton and R. S. Miller. Miller sold Apple the car in Miami and then, decided to make the trip with him.

The route led through Southern Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas. From Texas the Borderland route was followed. The roads encountered varied from deep sand and mud to paved boulevard. The worst stretch of road was between Yuma and Caliente.

This is the first Eight that has reached the Coast after such an extensive trip. Several have come from the Middle West. Hot weather was encountered on the desert, but at no place did the car fail. It went through every mudhole and sandpit on its own power. The only delay on the entire trip was in getting across the Gila River in Arizona. There was a line-up of six cars waiting to be taken over on the rickety ferry, but as half a day was required to take one car across a day and a half was lost in waiting. The river was high and to get across the Indians would pull the ferry a mile up the river and then let it float down to the other side.

The daily mileage averaged 200 miles. Stops were made for sightseeing and to visit friends at Jacksonville, Galveston, Houston and El Paso.

"The beauty of the trip," said Miller, who drove most of the way, "was the freedom from trouble. We did not so much as have to change a spark plug. The oiling and cooling systems were so perfect that not once did the water in the radiator get warm. And there was some pretty hard pulling in some places. Not a thing broke on the car, although the test was over a hard route.

"The United States tires gave good service. We did not have a single blow-out on the entire trip. All in all it was one of the most satisfactory trips I have ever taken.

"We had expected trouble starting at this season, but we found that while some bad road was encountered and one or two mud stretches, the car never faltered, and we always had the feeling that there was plenty of power in reserve. We met a great many motorists on the road bound for the Coast, and were told by many more that they intended coming West via motor car during the summer.

"On the trip we were ferried over twenty-five streams, forded fifty-three and at one time went twenty-eight miles across Mobile Bay.

"The Borderland Route is fairly well posted, but a few more signs would be of value to the strangers who will be touring to the Coast. There are many places where you can go wrong and such places could be eliminated with a little work by the clubs in Texas and Arizona."

Gee!

MAXWELL TOWS THE CABRILLO.

Tetzlaff Pulls Wonderful Feat.

Boat was Loaded with its Passengers.

Machine Nearly Pulled from the Wharf.

When Teddy Tetzlaff approached the Banning Company for permission to tow the Cabrillo, which is one of their largest passenger boats, at the San Pedro docks with his Maxwell "25" touring car, the officials of that company met his suggestion with derision. "Why, the weight of the heavy hawser alone will pull that little Maxwell over the edge of the dock when the Cabrillo lies off 150 feet," said an official of the boat line.

But Tetzlaff expressed such confidence in the ability of his car that they finally authorised him to make the attempt if the skipper was willing.

The skipper was even more skeptical than the managers had been. How could a machine weighing only 1850 pounds pull a boat weighing over 660 tons, loaded? It was only after an agreement had been reached relieving the Banning Company of all responsibility for damages in case the Maxwell was pulled off the dock that the skipper would consent.

Tetzlaff had never weighed 150 feet of rope cable, three inches in diameter, and wet rope at that, and, after the cable had been securely fastened to the axle of the car, when the Cabrillo had backed out in the water to a point over 100 feet from the dock, with the rope sagging down under the water, and stopped, and 776 passengers were standing breathlessly awaiting the demonstration

When he released the brakes preparatory to starting ahead for the pull, the weight of the three-inch cable fairly jerked the car backward for several feet before Teddy realized that he had not yet stepped on the throttle.

When he saw the wheels of his car almost at the very edge of the dock, he lost no time in throwing open the throttle and instantly the machine responded and moved forward gradually, but surely, until the heavy cable was brought up to the surface of the water and on until it was drawn up taut, and the big boat, with its 660 tons of gross weight and 776 passengers, moved forward, in spite of the fact that the tide was moving against it at the time.

"I knew that my Maxwell could do it," said Tetzlaff. "I have driven this touring car of mine over 20,000 miles and I have never undertaken anything with it yet that it has failed to perform. When I found that the tide was running against the boat, I realized that perhaps I was up against a proposition bigger than I had anticipated, but I was willing to try it according to our programme, and when I released the brake and found the car suddenly jump backwards towards the dock's edge, caused by the weight of the 150 feet of wet sagging three-inch rope, my determination to pull the boat was materially strengthened. A few feet farther and I would have been pulled into the water. I stepped on the throttle and the instant response assured success for the undertaking. I do not wonder at the incredulity of the Banning officials when the fact is considered that the Maxwell, weighing only 1850 pounds, towed a total weight of over 1,200,000 pounds, or more than 700 times its own weight."

MOTOMETER SHOWS LOW TEMPERATURE OF WATER.

THE thermo-syphon system of motor cooling is being put to a test on the King eights. The English Motor Car Company, distributors for the King line, have employed the motometer on the radiators to indicate the amount of heating that the water undergoes, and throughout the trials the system has proved unusually efficient. The red line of the indicating column has seldom risen above the point of highest motor efficiency on long tours or city runs, and not yet has the driver been able to make the water boil, even on mountainous roads.

The motometer keeps before the prospective buyer the temperature of the engine and serves as a notice of overheating. Not even on Quintero-street hill, the steepest [illegible] grade in the city of Los [illegible] which has a grade of 27 per [illegible] has the temperature [illegible] degrees, which is 22 degrees [illegible] boiling point.

Our Compliments to a Rival and Responsible Dealer

We want to second most heartily an advertisement inserted last week by a well-known California automobile dealer.

For years every responsible automobile dealer has known a certain truth regarding values placed upon used cars offered in trade, but we have all been backward in expressing this until the Howard Company said:

The highest bid for a second-hand car usually means the lowest value in the new car

We do not wish to steal any one's thunder, we simply desire to lend our most sincere indorsement to that advertisement.

On this subject of trading in motor cars there recently appeared an article in the editorial columns of the Journal of Jersey City. We reprint this article with the hope that every person who has read this much of this advertisement will read the reprinted article:

AUTOMOBILE TRADING

Look Out for the Dealer Who Takes in Used Cars at Fictitious Prices—A Pitfall the Average Buyer Does Not Think About.

The marvelously rapid evolution of the automobile industry has brought about a condition that has its dangers to every buyer and ought to be generally recognized.

The average man today who comes into the market for a new car has an old one to dispose of. When the trade was young every sale was a sale by itself, with no strings to it, but nowadays the percentage of transactions in which the dealer must handle a used car to sell a new one is nearly 100. In fact some dealers last year sold more used cars than new ones, being compelled in numerous cases to dispose of more than one used car to negotiate a new car sale.

This condition has paved the way for some pretty desperate work by dealers in cars that are difficult to sell in fair competition, and has cost buyers in general many a hard-earned penny because of their propensity to "fall for" specious inducements.

The dealer who cannot sell a new car by any other means always tries to attract the buyer by offering a high price for his used car, and the buyer who doesn't stop to think is very likely to take the bait, ignoring utterly the fact that used car values the country over are today nearly as well established as the values of listed bonds. Any car of standard make has its second-hand price, variable by a hundred dollars or so, according to condition or according to locality (some cars have slightly better markets at one place than at another,) but the actual difference between what one dealer in a given center can get for a used car and what another in the same center can get for the same car is scarcely appreciable. Therefore, the dealer who takes it in at a [illegible] price is bound to lose money on it and [illegible] give up some of his profit on the sale of the new car.

But do you think he does give up his profit or any part of it? Not if he knows it. It's as plain as two plus two equals four that you can't give away profits and stay in business. If you cut prices you've got to get your loss back somehow or shut up shop. In some cases that have recently been much in the public eye the latter necessity has been forced on [illegible] concerns that have permitted this practice [illegible] have failed to make good their forfeited [illegible] Those, however, that allow it and keep on going have to provide for it, and do so systematically by giving the buyer less for his money. The buyer often walks right into the trap and [illegible] ters himself on his ability as a trader when he turns in a car worth $1000 for $1500, while the dealer who sells him a new car priced at [illegible] and worth about $700, humbly takes his [illegible] end of the transaction and winks the other [illegible] The man who pays $2000 for this same car [illegible] no used car to trade in is a still heavier [illegible]

The moral of all this is: When you set out to buy a new car find out what your old car [illegible] worth, and steer clear of the dealer who [illegible] you half as much again for it. Depend on it the car he has to sell is not worth what he [illegible] for it, or if it is the manufacturer (who [illegible] him thus to cut prices and is probably [illegible] him out) will soon be out of business, [illegible] you with a car on your hands that has [illegible] ing, and can therefore hardly be given [illegible] when you get through with it.

The advice should be timely with the [illegible] season just ahead.—[From the Jersey [illegible] (Jersey City, N. J.,) Feb. 27, 1915.

Old Race Drivers Compare Valve Actions.

Buick valve in the head motor.
By Joe Nickrent.

VALVE-IN-HEAD MOTOR HUSKY.

The advantages of the valve in the head motor are so many and so obvious that it is hardly necessary to go into detail. The marvelous power developed by the little Buick valve-in-the-head motor is proof of the efficiency of this type.

The construction of the cylinder of a valve-in-the-head motor allows a smaller compression area for the same amount of gas and therefore delivers more power to the pistons.

The valves can be made a good deal smaller than in any other type of motor and in addition, there are no pockets in this type, inside the compression chamber in which the dead gas can collect and thus interfere with a proper mixture.

The valve action in the valve-in-the-head motor is much better because by the method of construction used, your intake and exhaust valves can never be open at the same time and this fact results in much better scavenging inside the cylinder.

The fact that a very large per cent. of the speedy racing cars entered in the Indianapolis classic use the valve-in-the-head type of motor is proof positive of the efficiency of it.

ADVANTAGES OF SLEEVE VALVES.

The biggest advantage of the sliding sleeve valve as is found in the Stearns-Knight motor, is the quietness and efficiency. This valve comes as near steam power as is possible in an internal-combustion motor.

The new light four-cylinder Stearns-Knight engine with its very few parts and perfect balancing features, is able to hold its own with ease against the best six and eight-cylinder motors with poppet valves. In the valve sleeve operation alone there are only one-quarter of the number of parts found in the mechanism of the poppet valve motor.

Ten manufacturers only in each country are allowed to manufacture and install in their automobiles, Knight type, sliding sleeve valve motors, and this fact shows the exclusiveness of the Stearns-Knight motor.

The performance of the F.R.P. cars in the Indianapolis classic will be watched with interest as these will be the first Knight-motored speeders to be entered in the big race, although the motors have made a good record abroad.

Speeding Up.

OUTPUT OF FACTORY TO BE INCREASED RAPIDLY.

WORD was received last week by Don Lee, California distributor for Paige motor cars, from President Jewett of the Paige factory, that the output for the coming season would be doubled, and that work on the factory extension which will make this possible will be started at once. As rapidly as possible the Paige output will be increased to 15,000 cars a year.

The new building will be 500 feet long, sixty feet wide and three stories high. It will be a wing to the present factory, and will form a working unit of the factory as originally planned. It was expected when the plant was first erected that more space would be needed right along, and plans were made for additions long before the time for their building.

The present capacity of the Paige plant is eighty cars a day, and for some time the factory has been running right up to the maximum. With the additional space, the output will be increased to 150 cars a day, and this will mean a production of 15,000 cars for the coming season. This will make the Paige factory the largest producer of medium-priced sixes in the world.

In addition to the extra floor space the new factory will provide, there will be a large quantity of additional machinery for making the production of Paige cars quicker and better. Improved methods of manufacture will be introduced to speed up the production to the limit.

For example, to facilitate the final assembling of the car a mechanical conveyer will be installed. This is the system whereby the integral parts of the car, beginning with the rear axle, are placed on a moving platform and part by part added as the car goes from one group of workmen to another, until the car is completely assembled.

One of the chief reasons for the remarkable growth of the Paige car, is the remarkable popularity of the Paige six. Since the first of the year, when the six was introduced, it has created a remarkable demand, reflected in the sale of more than $1,000,000 worth at the New York and Chicago shows, and of the sale of an extra allotment of 150 in Chicago during the month of April.

The decision of the Paige officials to double the output was made necessary by the popularity of this car, and by taking this prompt action they expect to be able to meet this demand in a most satisfactory way to their dealers and clients.

The Paige company now is in its fifth year, and has developed in that short time from a company marketing 300 cars a year to one which produces half that many a day by following the rigid policy of putting the utmost value into Paige cars, a policy which it has been able to follow largely because of its small capitalization and its freedom from bonded indebtedness or other interest drains.

TIRES ARE TESTED WHEN HEAVY CARS RACE TRAIN.

THAT the automobile has once more shown its ability to compete with the railroad train in speed and hard work was shown by the race last month between four motor cars and a railroad train from Tacoma to the glaciers of Mt. Rainier, in which the motor cars more than held their own. The race was one of the features of a campaign to advertise the beauties of Mt. Rainier and the Washington country near it at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The test was a difficult one, and making the choice of the motor cars for this trip, those in charge were content only with cars of proven dependability. Great attention also was given tire equipment, for the roads were slippery, and only tires of proven quality and ability to withstand severe road shocks, as well as to give nonskid protection, were demanded.

Motion pictures were made of the test, and the first proofs of some of the "stills" have been received by Manager Tom Wilkinson of the United States Rubber Company, together with a story of the test.

When the choice of car and tire finally was made, four Packards, equipped front and rear with United States Nobby Tread casings, were lined up with the train for the trip. The spectacle of a fast passenger train with its full complement of coaches and passengers reeling off mile after mile at a terrific pace in a vain attempt to distance the motor cars was one which the passengers never will forget.

On the level stretches the train was able to hold its own, but in the mountains it was a different story, for the Nobby Tread Packards were better climbers, their remarkable tire equipment giving them the traction, and obviating any danger of skidding.

Said Mr. Williams in regard to the trip: "While the United States Rubber Company builds its tires not for spectacular, but for day-in, day-out service, we are particularly pleased with the showing of the Nobbies in this event. Their work vindicates their choice, and only adds to the high regard in which they are held by the motorists of the Northwest."

Work on Chicago's new motor speedway is now being pushed continuously throughout the entire twenty-four hours of the day.

AIR-COOLED SIX IS A REAL LIGHTWEIGHT CAR.

"LIGHT car" is an expression with which all motorists conjure. Much is said and printed about the "light-car" class, but few are as definite in their delineation as Ralph C. Hamlin, the Franklin dealer. He says that to be a "light car" in the true meaning of the words, the vehicle must weigh approximately 3000 pounds or less.

For a year, Mr. Hamlin says, car makers have been advertising their product as a light car without specifying just what the term expresses. "Light sixes" and "light fours," or as the term is used by some, "little six" or "little four" apparently has a range measured only in the mind of the manufacturer. A few years ago some of these makers maintained a car had to weigh approximately 4500 pounds in order to have strength and when they began shaving off weight they termed their cars "light" no matter how small the reduction was.

The Franklin can substantiate its claim of having been always a comparatively light car and the "6-30" model bears the distinction of having been the first automobile of its class to fulfill the words. "It took foresight and sound judgment to see that ultimately the whole motor car question would revolve about the principles first recognized in the Franklin," Mr. Hamlin says.

"Now the owner of a Franklin has the satisfaction of hearing other men indorse these principles without being able to match the facts. All are maneuvering toward economy, lightweight and efficiency. Franklin light weight begins with the system of direct air cooling. All the weight of radiator, circulation system, jackets, pump and plumbing that totals 177 superfluous parts is eliminated by the Franklin system.

"What breaks up a car is the rigid heavy construction below the springs pounding the road-sudden jars to every part of the mechanism. On a Franklin car the front axle, rear axle and wheels all together weigh only 321 pounds. If anyone desires to know what this means to the life of a car, let him visit the second-hand dealer and try to buy a used Franklin. He will find fewer Franklins on sale than any other make. Ask any used car dealer and he will say there are more calls and fewer sales of Franklins, because they are so scarce. The principles embodied in the car tend to permanency of construction and that is what counts with the customer."

STUDY A CAR FROM A CHAIR.

CHASSIS IS SWUNG UPON TWO PIVOTS.

In this Manner with Practically no Effort it Can be Turned in Any Direction and be Studied from the Top or Bottom or Either Side. A Great Way to Demonstrate.

"Get out and get under" is out of date. Even for inspection purposes the old pastime which made motoring a matter of much labor and few joys is relegated to the junk heap. It is now possible to sit in an arm chair, or a Morris chair, if one prefers, and study every angle in the construction of the Overland car, from tires to connecting rods.

Mounted in the Los Angeles house of the J. W. Leavitt Company is a chassis which may be swung into any position for inspection. It is mounted on two pivots, one at the front and one at the rear, and the balance is so perfect that a child can turn it over and over.

In this way the lower construction of the chassis is brought into close view of a prospect seated comfortably in a chair. Craning to get a view in a mirror of the connecting rods and bearings, or studying the component parts detached from the motor, is no longer necessary.

The five-bearing crank shaft can be watched in operation and the advantages of the Overland system of separate castings for every cylinder can be easily seen in this unusual chassis. The oiling system, the ignition system, the electric-lighting and starting units, the cam shaft, the timing gears, in fact every part of the motor is readily displayed.

Without stooping over one can study carefully the construction of the clutch, the transmission gear box (which is a unit with the differential,) the Overland rear axle, the big Overland brakes.

The only way of showing more completely the construction of a car, according to Mr. Starr, would be to build one before the eyes of the prospect, and this, of course, is impossible outside of the factory, where expensive machinery makes the building of a high-class car a much less expensive matter than it was a few years ago.

KELLYS TRAVEL QUITE A WAY.

LOCOMOBILE OWNER GETS A FINE RECORD FROM HIS TIRES.

John R. Getz is one of the best boosters in Southern California for Kelly-Springfield tires. Mr. Getz has been using Kellys for several seasons. This year he has four casings of the Kelly make on his big Locomobile.

One day last week he called up Manager Jessup of the local branch to tell him that the front tire had given 11,000 miles of service while the rear one had gone 8500 miles, and that their condition is so good yet that he will drive to San Francisco on them within the next fortnight.

CHASE TRUCK AGENCY IS TAKEN BY HAWLEY-KI[illegible]

ANNOUNCEMENT was made yesterday by Manager Reeve Gartzmann that Hawley, King & Co. have taken the territorial agency for Southern California and Arizona of the Chase truck. A three-carload shipment of the most recent models of the truck has been received at the salesroom, No. 1037 South Olive street.

H. E. Franklin, who has been identified with the Chase line in Los Angeles for four years, will be in charge of the new truck department for Hawley, King & Co. He will have associated with him the same sales force that put the Chase to the front so prominently while headquarters were located on South Main street.

Several hundred trucks of this make are on duty in Southern California, and the new agents will conduct a service station for these old trucks at No. 356 Central avenue. A complete stock of parts for the old and new types of vehicles will be carried by Hawley, King & Co.

TRUCK TIRES TRAVEL A BIG DISTANCE FOR FIRM.

"THERE, if you want to know something about how good Firestone tires are read that," and A. T. Smith, the Firestone branch manager, handed a prospective subagent a letter.

It was from James W. Beam, superintendent for Barker Bros. Mr. Beam referred to the fact that a change had been made in two tires on one of the firm's two-ton trucks used in hauling household and office furnishings.

A paragraph of the letter said: "By our records we find the old tires were applied in November, 1912, having covered 21,500 miles in the service. This we believe is a very good record and we take pleasure in acquainting you with these facts."

Subsequently Mr. Beam explained that the tires that had covered 21,500 miles were on the rear of the truck. Although of two-ton capacity, the truck frequently was overloaded and driven at higher speed than that for which it was intended. The truck was called upon each working day and frequently was sent on long trips into the country off the boulevards.

Manager Smith stated that, although the experience of Barker Bros. as Firestone users was satisfactory to them and very pleasing to him, it did not represent a record for Firestone truck tires. He has had reports, he said, of mileage as high as 27,000, but the service for which the trucks were called upon perhaps was not as severe.

Several of the largest corporations in the city use Firestone equipment on their trucks exclusively, he said. Among these are the public service corporations, whose trucks are required to perform service under most trying conditions and regardless of weather conditions. "It's the public service people who make their trucks work," he said, "and they soon learn what the best is in every kind of equipment."

BREAKING LOCK.

At the entrance to the canyon the ceremony of "breaking the lock" on the bars to the canyon will take place. Officials of the automobile club, together with county and city officers, will assist in opening the gate, after the locks are broken, to the Wonderland of the West.

All motorists who are planning to take part in the tour, and all are invited, are asked to notify the auto club of their intention. Every motorist who is interested in the development of Southern California in the interest of touring is especially invited to join with the big majority which is planning to be present.

On Wednesday free pennants will be distributed for the decoration of the automobiles at the auto club headquarters, No. 1344 South Figueroa street. At that time final information on the plans for the celebration will be announced, or may be received by telephone.

SELECTION MADE.

The final selection of the spot was made yesterday for the location of the luncheon and the reception. All features of the parking space will be handled under the auspices of the auto club, and will be in direct charge of Secretary Standish L. Mitchell. No motorists will be allowed in the canyon until the main division of the parade, piloted by the Packard "Cactus Kate," reaches the mouth of the canyon.

Assurances have been received by those most vitally interested that the road will be entirely open, and motorists will be assured of a perfect round trip, returning to Los Angeles along the historic Malibu road and the Palisades, including a ride over the Wilshire boulevard.

No stops will be made en route, and motorists are requested by the auto club to be ready at the Courthouse promptly on time, as the entire tour will be handled on schedule. Further details of the celebration will be announced later.

Every effort is being extended to make the 1915 trip an equal in every way of the celebrated Premier transcontinental tour held in 1911, when a dozen privately-owned cars toured from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast.

The Premier organization is equipped in every way to handle the trip and give the greatest enjoyment to the motorists. Western roads have been blazed by Premier cars, and all roads of importance have been mapped by the Premier pathfinder with A. L. Westgard at the wheel. The trip of 1911 instituted by the Premier company proved rich in experience and was the first to show to the world that a large party of tourists could make the trip across the continent with safety and pleasure.

The tour will be made by easy stages, the schedule calling for short day runs and will be announced at an early date by the local agency of the Premier house.

Information and the prospectus of the tour can be secured from Smith Bros. in Los Angeles, or by writing the Premier factory direct.

Versatile.

MOTOR TRUCKS ARE MADE TO DO MOST EVERYTHING.

IT IS said the motor truck is put to more diversified uses in Los Angeles county than in any other section of the United States. Intended originally as a means of hauling materials in about the same capacity as the old two-horse team and the ordinary sand wagon, the manufacturers soon began to realize the possibilities and built accordingly.

Now the truck is in service for practically every kind of freight transportation and for some months has been in the passenger business as well. The Los Angeles sight-seeing cars with their capacity for fifty persons are said to be the largest in the country. All are mounted on a truck chassis as no type of pleasure car is constructed that could carry such a load.

As an example of the range of application to truck service Manager J. A. Stoner of the Mack Motor Truck Company points to the Republic, one of his lines. He says Republic trucks are used for almost everything from the sublime down the scale. At the top of the ladder he places the Barnes circus truck which conveys the calliope in all the parades of the organization as it tours the country. This calliope-truck has been in service two years. Not only does the motor have to supply the power to propel the truck and convey the heavy calliope, but it must drive the mechanism of the instrument at the same time.

A company that distributes mineral water about the city uses two Republic trucks and there are seven in brewery service. Groceries and provision houses make use of a number. A leading musical instrument house of the city uses one for transporting pianos and a magazine distributor uses another to supply the news dealers. In San Diego, a garbage collector had his fitted up with a tank body.

Transfer men employ several. Recently a Republic was equipped with a special body for use in the jitney service. A stock buyer hauls live animals in his. Oil tanks have been mounted on two and two others are used to supply gasoline stations. Three are in suburban service hauling passengers to communities removed from trolley lines. One serves as a mountain stage and gardeners and produce merchants make use of a number.

"No matter what it may be, there's a truck for the job," Mr. Stoner says.

The Denver Motor Club has decided upon Decker's Springs, a South Platte Canyon fishing resort, as the location for its country home this season. The new home will be about forty-five miles of Denver, on a road skirting the foothills of the Rockies, and running close to a popular fishing fork of the South Platte River for several miles.

HARRIS GOES TO BIG RACE.

In order that the Indianapolis 500-mile race may be held on time, Ed Harris is leaving tomorrow for the scene of the affray, leaving the Cole agency in the hands of his help. Ed hasn't missed a race on the big oval as yet and was afraid to stay away for fear they would call the race off. He has added George Steesberg, a former Stearns and Oldsmobile salesman, to his force and George will help hold the place down while Harris is away.

There seems general agreement that the day of the large, slow-speed six, giving its full power at 1200 to 1500 revolutions is doomed, that the motors with more than six cylinders, or the light high-speed six will oust it from the position it has held so long. This means that every motor manufacturer is working up the power per cubic inch, and this will undoubtedly lead to considerable changes in detail design. This fall will surely see the introduction of a great many interesting developments in the internal economy of American automobile engines.

PACKARD
New Model Trucks stand the LEDGER TEST

They have been subjected to every possible test of shop and of road.

Their advanced design is based on seven years' experience gained from the daily work of Packard trucks of the previous series.

The mechanical reasons for their efficiency and their economy of operation and maintenance are plain even to the unpracticed eye.

You can lay your finger right on the features that insure a balance on the right side of the ledger when all the operation costs and all the operation profits have been posted.

This new series of silent, up-to-date chainless trucks comprises 1, 1½, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6-ton sizes, each possessed of the same advanced features.

To see them, or the catalog of them, is well worth the while of every business man.

Packardize your hauling and thereby make it stand the ledger test.

SPEEDSTERS TO BE ON SCENE.

RACY MODELS ARRIVE THIS WEEK.

Demonstration of Over Seventy Miles an Hour in Touring Car Gets an Order—Cars will be Shipped Out in Lead and will be Painted in the Local Shops.

Southern motorists will have their first glimpse of the new Mercer roadster models this week, when the speed cars will be placed on exhibition at the local agency. The low, racy speedabout has attracted unusual attention and will undoubtedly secure a host of admirers in the West.

The statement that the new Mercer touring cars are guaranteed to turn off a speed of seventy miles with the top and windshield took Thomas L. Davis of New York, who has been spending the past few months in the West, to the local agency for a demonstration last week. In asking to be shown, Mr. Davis went so far as to hint that if that car made good in its demonstration of speed he would sign an order. On the Lankershim boulevard the required speed was made on the first trial, and Davis immediately filled out his order for a roadster, to be delivered in San Francisco next month.

The plan adopted last year of shipping the bodies to the agencies before painting, thus making it possible for the buyer to name the color he desires in a car, will be followed out this season. This is accomplished by shipping the cars in the lead, and after the purchase is made, applying the shade that the owner names. The painting job can be turned out at the factory before the car is shipped to the agency, as well.

Californians will undoubtedly watch with interest the work of the Mercer team at the Indianapolis speedway. The three Mercers will be manned by Eddie Pullen, Nikrent and Ruckstell, a trio of Californians that will be hard to beat. Trials have brought out a speed of more than a hundred miles an hour and Eddie Pullen wired that he is more than satisfied with the showings made by the cars. The veteran leader of the Mercer racing teams is putting the machines through a strenuous work-out during the present week, bowling over the course at top speed to ferret out every weakness that might develop in the cars.

NEW SPEEDSTER IS COMING OUT.

FAST NEW PREMIER MODEL IS GOOD FOR MUCH SPEED.

The new Premier speedster for which orders have been placed in advance by several Los Angeles men, will arrive at the salesroom of Smith Bros. in Los Angeles this week. It is the latest and fastest speedster creation of the Premier factory.

The body is typical racing type with low rakish lines and presents a very handsome appearance. In tests in the East the car has exceeded seventy-five miles over measured distance on the straightaway.

BUSHMAN EQUIPS HIS CAR WITH CORD TIRES.

AMETHYST collecting is rather expensive, but if Francis X. Bushman has a hobby, this is the one he indulges, having one of the most handsome collections in the country. Accordingly, when Mr. Bushman gave his order for his specially constructed Marmon touring car, he specified that it should be amethyst in color. Mr. Bushman, accompanied by his valet and secretary, has arrived in Los Angeles and established himself in the headquarters of the Metro Film Company at Hollywood, where he will produce the new "Quality Pictures."

The amethyst Marmon on Goodrich Silvertown tires, has attracted widespread attention throughout the city, not only for the reason that it is the first 1916 model Marmon to arrive in Los Angeles, but also because of the perfect harmony in the colors and lines of the car.

Mr. Bushman insisted upon the car being equipped with Goodrich Silvertown tires, and speaking of these tires, Mr. Bushman said: "I consider them the nearest approach to perfection that I have seen in an automobile tire. I am a strong believer in quality in everything, and certainly the Silvertowns stand alone in the automobile world as the quality tires. The easy riding features, the economy in gasoline, not to mention the wonderful strength and durability which is built into the tire, cannot be too strongly emphasized in my indorsement of same. I had some experience with the Silvertowns before I purchased the new 1916 Marmon, and in ordering the car I especially specified that the Silvertowns should equip it.

Mr. Bushman expects to make Hollywood his home for the next two years, and is delighted with California, stating that the climate here is not only an agreeable one in which to live, but is also marvelously adapted to the production of motion pictures.

How Far Will You Risk Your Money?

Will You Pay for the Manufacturer's Experiment of a New Motor Car?

That question confronts you today.

The penalty of success is imitation.

One year ago there was but one Light Weight Six—the Hudson—and makers of four cylinder cars and heavy sixes said, "Shun the Light Six. It is not safe." They said it would not stand up and that it was impractical.

Yet some of those who were most critical are today invading the Light Six cylinder field. There are now 31 makers in this class with cars listing at $1800 and under.

Practically every maker of a Six bought a sample Hudson. Now you are told: "This car is similar to the Hudson." "We use motors like the Hudson." "Our car is as good as the Hudson."

But will you risk your money on such a car?

Isn't it safer to take the car that 12,000 cars prove is a success?

You get that only when you get a HUDSON.

Even if the other car may cost a hundred or two less than the Hudson—think what it means if the car is not as good

The insurance feature should be considered.

And What About Service?

Hudson being the first, and 12,000 cars having been sold, Hudson got the best dealers.

There are 900 dealers who know what the Hudson will do. They have prospered with the Hudson. That organization—vast and strong—assures Hudson service in every locality.

These dealers are not the second and third raters. They are in first place. They give an added value to Hudson

A rival dealer in a big Hudson city tells his prospects Hudson is strong in that town only because it is sold by the leading dealer, who could sell any car.

Well, that is no doubt true, for Hudson dealers have done so well they can have their pick of any car made. Hudson dealers are successful because they know motor-car values.

They know the chances of disappointment—of failure—that confronts every untried new car. Such dealers don't experiment.

So, with all these inducements and needing only to say the word to get the agency of such cars as you may have been considering—they say, "No." They say: "We know what the Hudson is." "We know how little service attention it requires." "We know that 6000, even 7000 and 8000 miles on a set of tires is not unusual for a Hudson." "We know positively what the Hudson will do; we are not sure of cars that have yet to prove they are properly designed and properly built."

"There are more than $20,000,000 worth of Hudson Six-40s in use; we know the Company is financially strong and permanent."

"About others we do not know."

"We won't risk our money on an uncertainty."

Can you, then, be so sure of any other car—its correctness of design—its construction—its insurance?

Now Just One Word About Prompt Action

1526 Hudsons were sold in April.

There are only three Hudsons, on the average, left for each Hudson dealer.

Last year, thousands waited from April till August for Hudsons. And on August 1st there were still 4000 unfilled orders.

If you delay you cannot buy a Hudson. The supply won't last.

These bright, happy spring days are making a brisk demand for Hudsons.

Think of 1526 sold in April.

HAP HOGAN'S BUSHER DAYS.

SAN LUIS OBISPO (Cal.) May 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The news of "Hap" Hogan's death has affected me, even as greatly as though I had received tidings of the loss of some near and dear relative. There was something about Hogan's personality which was bound to make him liked by all who had ever been closely associated with him.

I recall vividly my first acquaintance with the late Venice leader. It was back in the spring of 1902, when Bobby Keefe and I were alternating at the pitcher's job upon the Santa Clara College varsity. We had been playing a hard-fought practice game against San Jose, and during the contest I was greatly impressed by San Jose's new catcher. He had a peculiar habit of looking toward third base while he pegged some of our fast runners out at second. But I was most especially impressed by the fact that, when he was on the coaching line, I had hard work to keep from taking a "balloon ascension." After the game I learned that the young man was a Santa Clara boy, and had recently returned home from Arizona. He was then known as "Swats" Bray.

We were badly in need of a catcher at that time, so the management immediately got busy dickering with Bray for his entrance into college. I met him formally the next afternoon, and during conversation I asked him what course he intended to take up. Like a flash came the answer, accentuated with a comical smile and eyes twinkling with fun:

"Eloquence and shower baths."

The startling originality of the remark, and its accompaniment of comical grimace, brought forth roars of laughter at my expense from the bevy of hearers. And I am sure I enjoyed the incident as much as the rest did. Nobody but Happy Hogan could have said the words, or produced their effect.

It was but a few days succeeding the above incident that Bray received an offer to join the Sacramento Coast League club. Thereafter he was to be konwn to the world of fans as Happy Hogan.

Happy made his initial bow at Oakland, in the famous nineteen-inning tie game, in which the late Bill Thomas received the sobriquet of "Iron Man." There is an episode concerning Hogan and this memorable game, which throws early light upon the daring confidence of the man. In those days bushers were not extremely welcome. In fact a busher was supposed to be much like the proverbial small boy—to be seen and not heard. Such precedent had no terrors for Happy. His first trip to bat the late Jim McDonald, who was umpiring, called a strike when Hap had a three-and-two count. Right there Hogan became known to the fans. Rising upon his toes and humping his back, Happy reached out his bat with comical flourish, shrieking as he did so, in energetic falsetto, "Oh, Jim, I couldn't-a reached that one with a fish-pole." All possibilities of a fine were spoiled by the umpire turning about to hide a smile.

In less than two weeks thereafter I joined the same club, and for two seasons Hogan and I were teammates and close associates. We were battery-mates in many a hard-fought contest, and many were the words of kindly counsel and good advice I received from him.

As an instance of his gameness, I recall a game played in San Francisco, in 1903, in which Hogan and I did battery work for Sacramento. It was a close affair and one run meant a whole lot. Near the end of the game, with two out, San Francisco got a man to third base. In pitching to the next batter, the ball got away from me for a wild pitch. There was a lot of speed on it, and it took a big "hop." Realizing that if it got away, it would mean a run, Hogan went after it with his bare hand. He saved the game, but the ball split his hand wide open, for a depth of two inches between the first two fingers. Hap insisted upon wrapping the two fingers together with tape and catching the game out. And would have done so had Graham allowed him.

The French stage has had its Coquelin, the American stage has had its De Wolf Hopper, and the movies have had their John Buny—each inimitable. Baseball has had its Happy Hogan—one, and only one. The passing of Hogan leaves a void in the baseball world scarcely to be filled. And beyond the marvelous genius for comedy lie the manly qualities and the great heart of the man. He was unspoiled by his rise from the ranks to high station. Happy had been a ball-player himself. He knew that ball-players have hearts and feelings. When he became manager he did not forget these things. To him a ball-player was something more than a mere chattel. Small wonder that his men would fight to the last put-out for him.

Even now, as I write this letter, I cannot bring myself to a realization that Hogan is dead. In looking back over my own brief career as a professional ball-player, the most pleasant memories cling to the fact of association with him. I have not seen Hogan personally for several years. And I had been counting upon, as the most pleasant part of a contemplated trip to Los Angeles this summer, the hope of visiting for a day or two with my old teammate and comrade, Happy Hogan. Alas!

May the Great Umpire call the play, upon the soul of Happy Hogan: "Safe at Home!"

Very sincerely yours,
WINNIE CUTTER.

BILLIARD EVENTS.

Coast pocket billiard champion, George Kirkland, scored ninety-seven balls against eighty made by E. Bowers at the Majestic academy on Friday night and thus met his first loss of a series of exhibition matches played during the past season with the strongest local players, at both odds and evens. Kirkland was to make 100, giving Bowers twenty. Though making the high runs of twenty-three and twenty-one, the chances of the game went in favor of his opponent near the end.

Rose won from Montana, on totals of forty-five to forty-three, in the Nelms-Brunswick combination billiard tournament, the game running fifty innings. Games continue this week, with competitors now in the appended positions:

Rose won 5, lost 1; Lusk won 4, lost 0; Gaskill won 3, lost 2; Woodward won 3, lost 2; Montana won 3, lost 3; Darling won 2, lost 3; Holladay won 1, lost 5; Randall won 0, lost 5.

Shook took the lead of entrants in the horseshoe pocket billiard tournament by inning from Clark the last game of the week at the Nelms and Bird parlor, in which he scored seventy-five balls to sixty-eight, with ten as high run for both players.

Wetmore and Shook meet on Monday evening. Scores of competitors follow:

Shook won 3, lost 0; Clark won 3, lost 1; McMillan won 2, lost 1; Garner won 1, lost 1; Steele won 1, lost 2; Evans won 0, lost 2; Rosen won 0, lost 2.

Henry Ford has donated and will equip a twenty-acre athletic field for the use of the public in Detroit.

Hupmobile
CAR OF THE AMERICAN FAMILY

In Comfort—a Big Car

Comfort is one of the big things you want in an automobile.

Comfort is one of the big things you get in the Hupmobile.

Real comfort, solid comfort; with plenty of room for five passengers—or seven, if you prefer.

The wheel base is long; the tires are big; the springs are long and flexible and easy-acting.

The upholstery is deep and soft; the seat backs high and restful; you can stretch and relax to your heart's content.

Actually, the Hupmobile leaves nothing to be desired in the way of good comfort features.

These extend to its equipment, too—the one-man top, with quick-acting storm curtains lowered and raised from the inside; the two-piece, ventilating, rain-vision windshield; the tonneau foot-rest and robe rail, etc.

Ride in the car, and see how very comfortable it is; how roomy and easy riding it is.

Let the Hupmobile itself prove that it is the best motor car investment you can possibly make.

Fifteen of the Many Reasons Why the Hupmobile Leads the Field

Non-stallable motor—insures against accident.

Spiral bevel gears in full-floating rear axle—highest priced construction; admitted best.

One switch to control starting and ignition—simplest on the market.

Speedometer drive from transmission—no exposed gears, silent.

Underslung rear springs—long and flexible—give easiest riding.

Special design tail lamp which illuminates road and ditches—makes backing easy.

Exceptionally easy steering.

Special dimmer bulbs and glass in headlights—no road glare.

Two-gallon reserve in gasoline tank—you are never left helpless on road.

Tungsten steel valves—do not warp or pit—used in highest priced cars.

Ten per cent over-size tires—insure maximum mileage.

Non-skid tires on rear wheels regular equipment.

Self-lubricating springs—never squeak.

Five demountable rims on every car.

One-man top; quick acting storm curtains.

$5,450 Per Day Spent To Fortify Goodyear Tires

The other day we cited our experts to certain well-known tires. And we asked, What could Goodyear save by building tires like these?

$1,635,000 a Year

The answer was, "Based on current production, our saving would be $1,635,000 per year." That means $5,450 per day.

But that saving would probably cost our users a million dollars monthly. And the cost to Goodyear soon would be the rulership of Tiredom.

One Must Choose

Here's the choice that confronts us day after day: Shall we skimp Goodyear tires in ways that can't be seen, and increase our profit $1,635,000 a year? Or shall we pay that price to give our users a better tire than others?

Our answer is this:

Goodyear Fortified tires, for many years, have embodied five costly, exclusive features. These are five great protections found in no other tire.

We spend on experts $100,000 yearly to find new betterments to add.

In the past year alone we have added improvements which cost us exceeding $500,000 a year.

Those are the facts; believe them. We never exaggerate, never misrepresent.

Price Reductions

Now note another side.

Despite this ceaseless improvement, Goodyear prices are constantly coming down. Our last big reduction—on February 1st—made three in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

Yet not a feature is missing, not an item is skimped. And this year we are spending a half-million dollars on newly-adopted betterments.

That's one result of our mammoth output, our new equipment and our modern methods.

When we spend such sums to build tires better than rivals, don't you think it worth while to get Goodyears?

Most men do. Goodyear tires are selling now much faster than we can build them. Any dealer will supply you.

DOC WHITE TO LAND BERTH.

That Doc White will be made "acting manager" of the Venice club is practically conceded in all quarters, although there has been no definite statement from President Maier.

Overall is so confident that White will get the place, he says, that he is no longer an aspirant, while friends of Dick Bayless say that he is about reconciled to returning to his former duties as field captain.

The selection of either Bayless or Overall would have been a popular one, as will that of White. The latter came to the club under conditions that made his appointment practically certain from the start. Bayless, it is reported, will receive additional salary for serving as field captain, with the promise of a chance at bigger things later.

President Maier will visit the clubhouse at the conclusion of the second game today, name the "acting manager" for the remainder of the season and have a brief talk with his men, explaining the arrangement under which the club is to be conducted.

Maier stated last night that Roy Hitt will be unable to accompany the club to San Francisco this week. Hitt's injured knee is still bothering him, and it is figured that another week's rest will be required to effect a complete recovery.

SEALS DIVIDE UP WITH BEES.

HEAVY HITTING FEATURE IN THE DOUBLE-HEADER.

Salt Lake Wins Two Out of Three Games Played so Far in Rain Week—Morning Game Won by the Mormons by Lopsided Score of 13 to 6—Seals Win in Afternoon.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SALT LAKE CITY, May 22.—Salt Lake and San Francisco broke even in a double-header, played here today, the Bees taking the morning game, 13 to 6. The Seals reversed the order of things in the afternoon, winning 12 to 6. Both games were characterized by heavy hitting. Of the three games played here this week Salt Lake has won two. The scores:

MORDECAI BROWN BEATS TIPTOPS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, May 22.—Mordecai Brown's pitching and batting greatly aided Chicago in beating Brooklyn, 4 to 2, today, and the win, with Newark's defeat, put the locals into a tie for second place. Brown got a single and a triple and scored two Chicago runs, while his seven strike-out victims included Kauff.

WHITTIER HIGH TITLE HOLDERS.

While Whittier High School had the championship in the county section cinched a week ago, her ball team left no doubt about it yesterday when it defeated Pasadena, 6 to 4. Duffy Seay's men batted Buckmaster, the tooted Quaker twirler, out of the box in the first inning. But Moss, who substituted for him, was effective.

INGLEWOOD WINS FIFTH STRAIGHT.

Again the Inglewood sluggers came out victorious. This time they walloped Gardena High School, 13 to 0.

This victory gives Inglewood five straight wins and will place them in the Southern California finals. They have already cinched the race in their division, the bay section of the Suburban League.

"Duke" Oestriech passed the pill over the plate and struck out thirteen men. All the members of the team did very good work with the stick and the fielding was excellent.

Buick
Valve-in-Head
THE SIEGE GUN OF GAS MOTORS

The reason this gun will shoot 24 miles is because the firing chamber is so arranged that ALL the force of the powder explosion goes directly against the shell. None of the energy generated by the explosion is wasted.

In the famous Buick Valve-in-Head motor all the gas is exploded directly behind the piston, just as all the powder is exploded directly behind the shell in the siege gun.

If the gun were built this way fully 15 per cent of the powder would explode harmlessly and uselessly in the side pocket shown in the drawing. Hence the shell would travel only about 20 miles on the same amount of powder.

In the "L" head motor, you see, part of the gas explodes in the valve chamber, which means that the piston head does not receive the full force of the blow.

If the gun were built like this 30 per cent of the powder's energy would be wasted in the two side pockets illustrated. That part of the explosion would be against the side walls of the gun, instead of against the shell.

In the "T" head motor there are two side pockets and one-fifth of each explosion is waste. This is the least efficient of all types of motors.

Game is Fierce Fought—Boston Rallies, Getting Four Runs in the Seventh and Tying the Score. Bresnahan Makes Two Muffs. Score 5 to 4.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BOSTON, May 22.—Chicago went into first place in the National League pennant race with a third victory over Boston today, 5 to 4. Four runs behind, Boston had tied the score in the seventh inning on three hits with as many errors, by Chicago. Among the latter were two throws muffed at the plate by Bresnahan. Chicago's winning run came in the ninth on a hit by Bresnahan, a wild throw by Maranville, an out and Phelan's sacrifice fly.

A home run by Zimmerman over the left field fence was a feature.

Lexington
CRITERION OF ITS CLASS

100% Honest—$99\frac{44}{100}$% Perfect

You can't climb hills on promises; the fictitious and arbitrary value of a name doesn't pay for repair parts.

We realize that the manufacture and marketing of motor cars has reached the stage where the experienced buyer wants performance, not promises—ability, not bulk or non-essentials.

To this class the Lexington appeals, because any one who has driven a motor car is quick to appreciate that every dollar of the purchase price, $2025 here, puts vital features of motor car service in their own hands.

If you want the utmost in performance, coupled with beauty of design and finish, investigate the Lexington. Know the satisfaction of owning this car. It loses no luster by comparison. It asks no odds of any car. It will always be a credit to your judgment.

BRAVES CUT OUT SOCIETY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BOSTON, May 22.—Members of the World's Championship Boston National Baseball club have been forbidden by President Gaffney to appear in social events hereafter without special permission. In a letter to the Rev. Geo. P. O'Connor of Malden, made public today, Mr. Gaffney said he had issued orders to that effect with a penalty of indefinite suspension for violation. After their success in the last world series the Braves became popular after-dinner speakers. The ban on social activities followed a slump of several days in their playing.

Wonder Road.

would form a second class of travel through the road and the third class would be of an industrial nature as the road would tap the rapidly-growing pear orchards of the Palette Creek and desert country as well as passing the various mines located around the base of Mt. Islip.

DESCRIPTION.

From Azusa to the west fork of the San Gabriel the scenery is of typical gorge nature and there is already a road of a few miles in length over which automobile traffic is possible at the present time.

The country begins to open up as the main creek if left, and "benches" begin to occur. About a mile and a half up the West Fork, the line passes through Camp Rincon, one of the well-known summer camps of Los Angeles county; thence along alternate bluffs and benches the usual canyon effect is had until arriving at and proceeding up to the North Fork, when a further change to a still more open country occurs.

The North Fork is a wooded valley with a permanent flow of water, and there are several private camps established along this line.

CLIMBING.

The road winds along the bottom of the valley until arriving at the Narrows, where it begins to climb above the stream to a greasewood and live oak covered bench approximately seventy feet above the river. Traversing this bench for a mile and a half the river begins to rise, and the grade passes along the face of the hill to the bottom of the north fork among alders and shrubbery at the crossing. Here a zigzag of fifteen loops occurs in order to develop the necessary elevation. From the zigzag the main range to the north is constantly visible as is Cold Brook Camp, one of the largest summer resorts in the San Gabriel district.

At the end of the zigzag the route goes along the mountain side to a crossing of Soldier Creek above a falls of about sixty feet, straight drop. This stream is permanent and there is probably a 200-inch flow. One-half mile from this creek the edge of Lower Pine Flats is reached and again very light construction maintains, with the exception of about one-quarter of a mile of hillside work in crossing and re-crossing Soldier Creek.

TIMBER.

At this point a heavy growth of pine timber begins and continues with varying density for a distance of approximately twelve miles.

From Soldier Creek the road winds back and forth across Pine Flats, and from here a regular mountain road contiues to the summit. Proceeding along this road for a mile from Pine Flats, ten miles of the road just described would be below and in plain sight until the Bear Creek watershed is reached.

From this point Crystal Lake lies one-quarter of a mile easterly and one-quarter of a mile below, and a magnificent view is to be had to the south from Santa Monica to Pomona.

Going northerly along Bear Creek we are midway on the mountain side. Bear Creek lies 2000 feet below, and Mount Islip nearly as far above. The route lies through a granite formation, fairly solid in nature, and detached pinnacles occur in places. The opposite wall of the canyon is 2000 feet high and a mile and a half away.

GREAT VIEW.

At the head of Bear Creek a view to the north begins and the main range intervenes to the south. The route here traverses through big pine timber with pine needle-covered ground fairly well watered with small springs and seepages.

This condition maintains until the entrance to the Devil's Punch Bowl. The punch bowl is in a many colored, soft sandstone formation. The rock is stratafied and of alternately medium and soft structure. This has resulted in erosion by the elements until today there is a bewildering confusion of spires, knobs, balanced rocks and other designs of a grotesque and spectacular nature. Stratafied rocks at an incline stand in rank, even in height and thickness. White rock, brown rock, red rock and gray rock, with green pines and firs at their bases, afford a display very similar to that of the Garden of the Gods, near Colorado Springs, and a miniature copy in some ways of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

THE END.

Traversing three miles of this character the route reaches the head of the Pallett Creek Basin at the Watkins Ranch. Here is a high sloping plateau 1500 feet above the adjacent desert and for the following eight miles is to be seen the whole Tehachepi Range to the north, and in exceptionally clear weather the Funeral, Panamint and White Mountains are visible in the northeast.

In this basin the line assumes the character of a desert road in construction. Leaving Pallett Creek the view becomes essentially that of a regular desert road, with Little Rock, the main oasis, six miles distant from Pallett Creek. Eight miles further is Palmdale and the Southern Pacific Railroad.

The road from Azusa to Palmdale is approximately sixty-three miles in length and can be kept open about nine months in the year. The grade would at no place exceed 10 per cent.

NO BOUTS FOR SPEED CLASSIC.

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) May 22.—Boxing contests between Lightweight Champion Freddie Welsh and Milburn Saylor, and George Chip and Jack Dillon, which were scheduled to be held here on May 28, will not be permitted, according to an announcement of Mayor Bell, which became public today. It has been customary to hold a boxing match on the day before the 500-mile race at the speedway, but Mayor Bell says that the sport "degenerated into fake prize fights conducted solely for the money there was in it."

Venice Wins.

er doubled to the same territory, driving Johnson across. Carlisle followed him along home, and was safe when Fisher dropped Derrick's perfect relay in the collision at the plate. Berger advanced to third on Wilhoit's out, and Kane flied to Hilyard.

CROWDED FIFTH.

Three hits, a walk and two stolen bases were crowded into the fifth inning, but Venice was able to make them stand for only one run. Johnson started the rally with a hit to right. Carlisle fanned, and Berger singled. Wilhoit forced Berger, Johnson moving to third. Kane put Johnson across with a clean single to right. Wilhoit went to second on the hit and, with Kane, executed a successful double steal, Fisher making a high throw to third that Bates was lucky to block. Risberg walked, filling the bases. Hetling, usually effective in a pinch, popped harmlessly to Stumpf.

Venice had men on third in the seventh and eighth. Wilhoit walked with two down in the seventh and took third on Kane's hit. Risberg was retired on a sensational assist by Bates. Evans started the eighth by walking Hetling and Purtell, and Mitze sacrificed. Johnson and Carlisle, however, were impotent to advance the runners. The score:

See Me First:

You are going to purchase a new car in the very immediate future and to be sure of perfect satisfaction, both in the car and service, it must be a new Mitchell, backed up by me.

I cannot see why you should be guilty of doing the row in search of a car when all that is necessary is to get the Personal Touch and let me or one of my representatives call on you and demonstrate what it is to possess a car built for the "Owner."

A car that has proven itself in making that remarkable test of "7500 miles in 30 days," 250 miles a day, with the bonnet sealed, traveling through 23 States, some of them three times, having no opportunity to select roads, the weather being the most treacherous of the year.

The Mitchell is the real "Owner's" car, as 7500 miles is equal to several seasons' travel. And look what it did. Sealed bonnet, without adjustments of any kind, without repairs, ignition system never faltering, gasoline feed never failing, starter worked every time, perfect brakes, engine never heated, showing a perfect cooling system—the most gruelling work ever asked of any make of car, irrespective of horse power or price.

Now, if you are looking for an automobile backed by a responsible factory, one that will be in business for years to come and has given the American public eighty years of faithful service, a Mitchell is the car.

If you are looking for a car backed by a responsible dealer, it must be a Mitchell backed by me. I have given the public fifteen years of my service in the motor car industry, so am sure of what I say and do—in fact, am the man who put the word "service" in the automobile dictionary.

The Mitchell is made with the idea, "light weight, but safety first." Most accessible car built. The "Owner's" car.

Do not put too much stock in advertised service. Money cannot be spent for advertising service and service given at the same time.

The demand from California for Savage Tires is so great that our factory is kept busy day and night to supply it.

Such a demand right here at home where Savage Tires and the Savage Company are well known and where motorists demand the best is the strongest argument that can be offered for Savage quality and Savage satisfaction.

Orders are increasing rapidly, but no matter how fast they come, we are going to take care of them—everybody will be supplied. Extensive additions to our plant are now under way and we are equipping to more than double our output. A little later on—but that's another story.

Carcasses are of generous size and extra plies of 17-ounce Sea Island fabric with a tensile strength of 320 lbs to the square inch are used—for example our 3-inch tire has four, our 5-inch tire seven and our 5½-inch tire eight plies of fabric. This costs more but it means better tires.

Every carcass is machine made. All plies adhere perfectly at every spot. This means uniform strength and is your insurance against blow-outs. Savage Plain Tread Tires possess exceptional strength, resiliency and long life—you can find no greater tire value.

He was greatly pleased with the condition of the roads as far as they were able to go, and decided that with the opening of the Crest route as far as Big Bear Valley Southern California will have one of the finest automobile tours in the State to offer the eastern motorist. They drove as far as possible over the Crest route. The road is now open beyond Little Bear Lake for several miles.

This week Mr. Fageol will tour to the San Diego exposition and visit there for several days, returning to Los Angeles. He will drive home by the coast route.

Altogether more than ten carloads of motor truck parts will be shipped to the Moreland factory. This will mean that material for nearly 100 trucks will soon arrive in this city.

With business off his mind, Mr. Moreland will make his way to Indianapolis, where a place has been reserved for him in Ralph de Palma's pits. The well-known Italian racing pilot and the man that made distillate trucks famous on the Coast are old pals, and they will doubtless spend much of their time together.

When victory a stop for gas or a tire may easily swing the result. The car that can be figured to maintain a high average without a single stop is the car with the best chance. Some wonderful non-stop racing records have been set during the past year by cars with the overhead valve motor with camshaft overhead. The shape of the combustion chamber and the direct and positive valve action are the two most important reasons for the splendid performance of this type of motor.

"Power, economy and reliability are, of course, factors just as desirable in a motor for the average owner as for the racing driver. This was the reason why the Chalmers Motor Company adopted this type of motor for their new '32,' and the satisfaction that these cars have given so far in owners' hands has amply borne out the reputation this kind of motor has established in the racing game."

"The average losses of power in a generator of the type commonly used is 60 per cent. Considering these losses, the power taken from the engine to drive the generator is 134 watts or a little less than one-sixth horse power.

"One-sixth horse power is a very small amount as compared to the total output of the motor. The cost to produce it is proportionately less.

"In taking a hundred-mile trip with a car giving about eighteen miles to the gallon of gasoline, the cost for six gallons of 13-cent gasoline would be 78 cents. The cost for operating the electrical system alone would be a little less than 3 cents, considering 3 per cent. of the motor power being used in the generator."

CLUB WOMEN TAKE A TRIP.

DRIVE UP TO THE NORTHERN CONVENTION.

Mrs. William Bush Takes a Party of Prominent Los Angeles Society and Club Women to the Big Convention of Women's Clubs at San Francisco in Her Pierce Arrow.

No motor tour has ever been more keenly enjoyed than the trip made last week from Los Angeles to San Francisco by a party of Los Angeles clubwomen including Mrs. W. E. Bush, Mrs. Fred Johnson, Mrs. Ella I. Mitchell and Mrs. Stella Orr. They traveled in Mrs. Bush's Pierce Arrow and went north to attend the State meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

The coast road was followed and although the ease and comfort of the car in which they rode may have been responsible they report the roads in first-class condition.

Two days were required for the trip and although fast time was made they stopped wherever fancy dictated and enjoyed the scenery as they traveled. The first day's run was from Los Angeles to Santa Maria. They left here at 9:30 in the morning and dined in Santa Maria that evening, lunching at Santa Barbara. They went over the San Marcos grade and even spoke well of the condition of this stretch of road.

The second day's run was from Santa Maria to San Francisco. Mrs. Bush reports that the State highway is practically completed from San Luis Obispo to San Miguel, and fast time was possible over this road. From San Miguel to Sargent the road was somewhat cut up with construction work. From Sargent to San Francisco the State highway is completed.

NEW PACKARD TRUCKS SELL.

FIVE OF THEM PURCHASED IN THE WEEK JUST PASSED.

An excellent reception has been accorded the new Packard worm-drive trucks according to A. H. Raymond of the truck department of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., who reports five sales of the new trucks in the past two weeks. Three-ton models have been purchased by White Transfer and Express of No. 576 Central avenue, by W. A. Edwards of No. 128 West Fifth street, and the Union Oil Company, which purchased two of the three-ton models for gasoline and fuel oil delivery. C. H. Hemme took one of the four-ton models for merchandise delivery work to the mountain towns out of San Diego.

"Bob" Burman Chose STA-TITE Piston Rings for his winning race in the 200-mile Southwestern Sweepstakes at Oklahoma City.

"Motor Harmony Depends Upon Perfect Piston Ring Service."—Efficiency Ed.

He wanted Piston Rings that would be absolutely compression tight.

He wanted Piston Rings that would produce Constant and Full Power.

He wanted Piston Rings that would be strong enough to endure the strain of a hard race.

He wanted Piston Rings that would be flexible and resilient to provide equal expansion under strain.

He chose Sta-Tite Piston Rings because they are mechanically efficient. They produce Perfect Compression and Full Rated Horse Power at a reduced Mileage Cost.

This cross-section shows the STA-TITE interlocking groove construction. The ring seals perfectly in the Piston Groove. "Play" and "Carbon Pockets" are eliminated.

BUGATTI IS OUT OF RACE.

BARNEY TO DRIVE MAXWELL, IS RUMOR.

De Palma, Grant, Klein, Babcock, Resta, Earl Cooper, J. Cooper, Carlson, Rinckstell, Donaldson, Anderson, Wilcox and Burman Qualify.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

INDIANAPOLIS, May 22.—Every driver who faced the officials in speed trials today managed to qualify for next Saturday's 500-mile sweepstakes, with an average speed of better than eighty miles an hour for a lap. A round dozen pilots, all who tried, made good and escaped elimination.

BUGATTI OUT.

Fate definitely decided that Barney Oldfield will drive another car when Charlie Fuller's Bugatti was put out of the running with a broken connecting rod and crank case. The veteran had the German creation going nicely when the mishap occurred. Oldfield's name was connected with four different cars tonight, but it is thought that when Saturday's race starts he will be at the wheel of a Maxwell.

DE PALMA'S LAP.

Ralph De Palma made two attempts to smash Boillot's record of 1:30:13 for a circuit of the track. The best the Mercedes could produce was 1:31:30, which is the record for the year. In the morning De Palma went 38 laps in 1:40 2-5 and 60 laps at an average of 89.37 miles an hour.

Earl Cooper qualified his Stutz in brilliant style, when he made the circuit in 1:33:80. His team-mates, Anderson and Wilcox, tore off 1:36:60 and 1:39:90, respectively, and Bob Burman placed his special Peugeot in 1:37:40.

QUALIFY.

De Palma, Grant, Klein, Babcock, J. Cooper, Billy Carlson, Rinckstell and Donaldson were the others to qualify.

Darce Resta, winner of this year's Vanderbilt Cup and Grand Prize races, waited until the last minute to qualify his Peugeot. The English pilot created a good impression with a lap in 1:33:60, an average of 96.2 miles an hour.

FOUR GARAGES IN PAST SIX MONTHS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, May 22.—The big brick garage now in process of construction for the firm of Potter & McCormick on South Thomas street gives this city a string of four garages, which have sprung up in the past six months. All of them are substantial buildings, ranging in cost from $3000 to $7000.

The first to go up was the E. E. Booth garage at the corner of Park and First streets. It cost $3000. It has a white enameled brick front. Next came the Lorbeer & Reynolds garage on East Second street. It was made of ruffled brick and cost $7000. A few weeks ago Dr. J. C. Cummins put up a whaling big garage on North Garey avenue, and now Potter & McCormick company tops the list with a brick structure costing about $4000. The automobile dealers of this city have outgrown the idea of using dilapidated old store buildings for salesrooms.

BILL BACON'S TERRIBLE BEATING TOLD BY VAN.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

CHARLES VAN LOAN, author, and Bill Bacon, golfer, rancher and ex-athlete, have been making a sort of royal progress on that hunting trip. Every small town they come to they seem to hang around the newspaper office until some one realizes they are there and hastens to interview the great author and his distinguished companion.

At all events, they have been flooding their friends with various clippings from local newspapers en route, wherein Van Loan appears to have modestly saddled Bacon with almost more distinction than even his broad shoulders can bear.

There was the Carson City Express, for instance. Evidently by the time they got to Carson City Van Loan was in the throes of composition, for that newspaper prints a wild story purporting to relate an incident between Bill Bacon and a young colt, which Van Loan poured into the reporter's feverish ears. We have heard about these Nevada ponies before, but this one is certainly going to be the hero of Van Loan's next story.

It appears that the travelers came upon a drove of wild horses, including some mares and colts. Bill, by running the car with consummate skill, succeeded in dividing them so that the mammas and babies were separated from the herd. Then he challenged them to a race. They accepted the challenge and kept the pace at fifty miles an hour. Later the mammas and all the colts except one dropped behind, but the one game colt flew on and ever onward, till the car was red hot and the gasoline was all used up and the tires worn out. Then Bill decided to get out and finish the race—ex-athlete and all that sort of thing, you know. Besides, he estimated that the colt had already done 200 miles or so and if he, Bill Bacon, could not beat a wheezy, winded colt he'd be sugared.

But it appears that the colt had other ideas. The rest of the story is very painful reading. The colt seems to have landed Bill one in the solar plexus, jumped playfully over him a la Ruth St. Denis, picked him up by the back of his pants and shaken him with good-humored gentleness, then carried him back to the car and dropped him in his seat.

After which the colt bade them a polite adieu and skipped off back to mamma at sixty miles an hour, as fresh as the morning dew.

Our traveling friends then dashed on into Carson City and by a strange coincidence met the newspaper man in his office. The next day they bought up the edition and sent copies to Los Angeles friends, just to show what a wild country they are traversing. And what a lot Carson City seems to think of the distinguished travelers.

CANADIANS BEATEN BY JOHNS HOPKINS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BALTIMORE (Md.) May 22.—The Johns Hopkins lacrosse team defeated Toronto here today 6 to 4. At the end of the first half the score was 2 to 2 in Toronto's favor, but Hopkins ran away from the Canadians in the second half, which was played in a heavy rain.

REVIVAL OF HORSE RACING IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—A revival of horse racing and harness events in Northern California will be encouraged, horsemen hope, by the series of Sunday matinees beginning tomorrow at the Panama-Pacific Exposition and two meetings set for June and November.

The opening matinee tomorrow will be put on by the San Francisco-California Driving Club. The events will be amateur. Sunday matinees will be continued until September.

The two race meetings announced each will have purses aggregating more than $100,000.

The first of these will be from June [illegible] The second meeting will be from October 20 to November 12.

It was announced also that a running meeting probably would be held in September and October. Efforts have been made to organize a jockey club in anticipation of such a meeting.

Several stables have arrived for the coming events and have been quartered at the exposition. W. G. Durfee of Los Angeles has sixteen horses at the track stables. Other stables are expected to arrive soon. V. L. Schuler of Indianapolis, Frank Childs of Pleasanton, Cal., [illegible] Hemet, Cal., Al [illegible] W. W. Fleming, C. L. [illegible] C. A. Durfee are among the [illegible] who will compete.

Two Canadian stables are [illegible] those of E. J. [illegible] son, both of Winnipeg.

Austin, Bryant & Carter,
1660 Compton Ave.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:

I have been having such splendid results from using your A. B. C. Oils that I want to tell you about it.

I operate a Menominee truck on a daily milk haul of 115 miles and since using your oil I have had the minimum of engine trouble, no loss of time and my carbon trouble is a thing of the past.

My use of your oil was begun only after I had tried several oils (some so-called Pennsylvania oils, too,) and had had considerable trouble.

Have recommended A.B.C. to many of my friends and in every case it has proven satisfactory; it sure does do the work under all conditions.

You may use this letter in any way you may choose.

1—When Mr Twee Deedle and Dickie left the two little faun boys they started to go back home, but as they were very tired they stopped in a field.

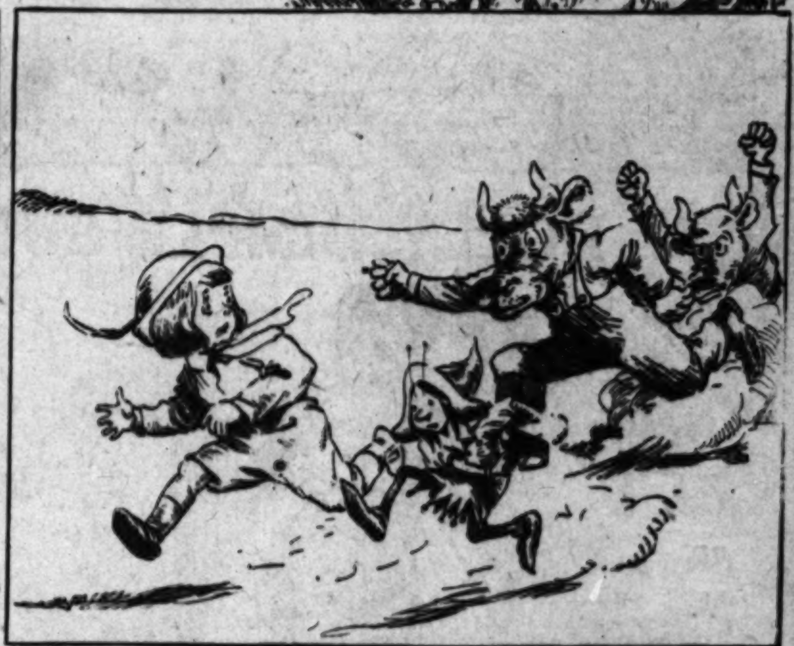
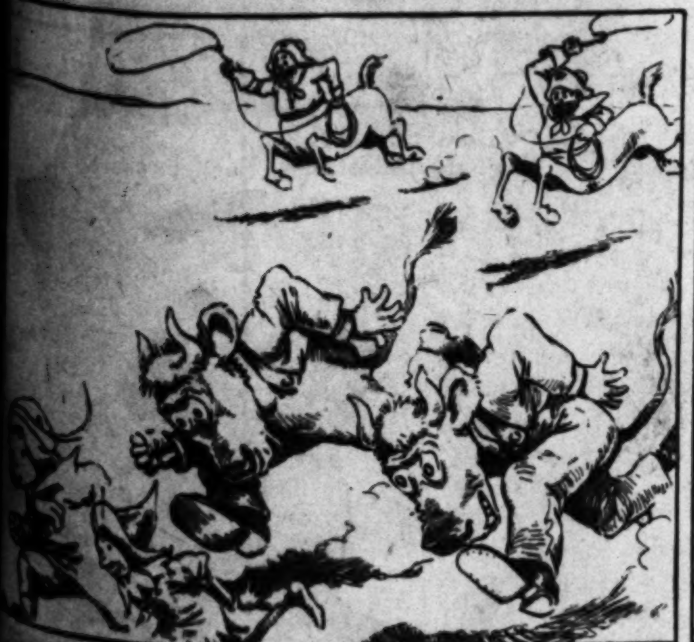
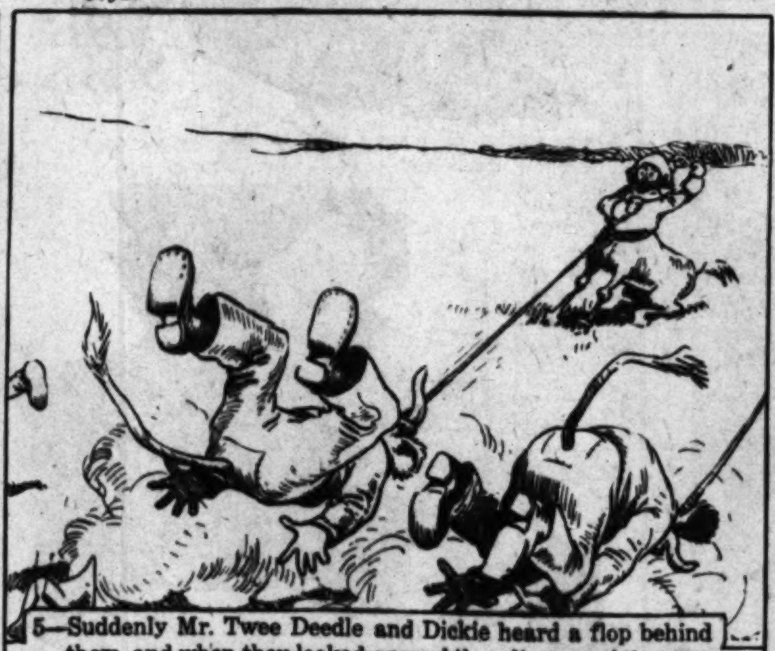
2—Suddenly they heard steps in back of them, and looking around they saw coming toward them two funny boys with cow heads. "Run!" cried Mr. Twee Deedle. "It's the Cowboys!"



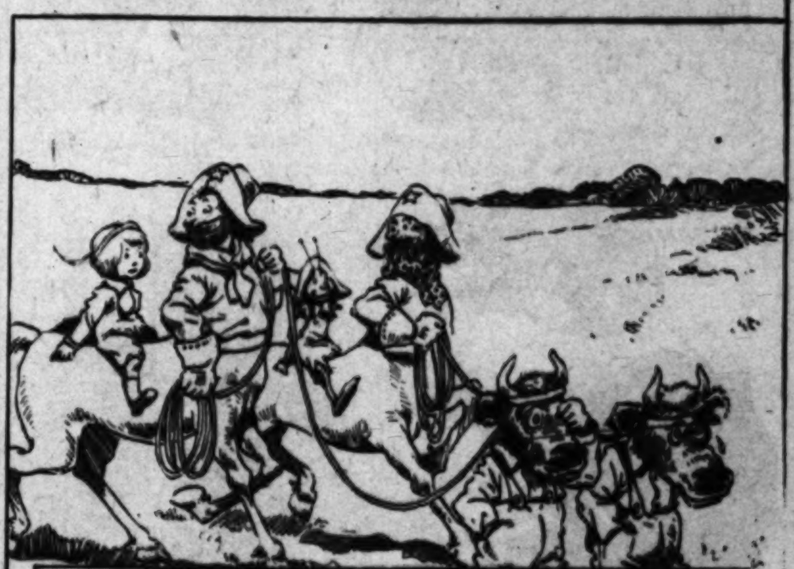
3—So Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle ran as fast as they could, with the two Cowboys in close pursuit.



[illegible]!" cried the Cowboys, as they lowered their heads and chased our friends.



5—Suddenly Mr. Twee Deedle and Dickie heard a flop behind them, and when they looked around they discovered that two Horsemen had rushed up behind the Cowboys and had thrown lassoes over the Cowboys, jerking them off their feet.



6—Then the Horsemen lifted Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle on to their backs and marched the two Cowboys back to their sheds. "We have to watch them very carefully!" said the Horsemen, "for the Cowboys are full of fun and would think nothing of tossing a person up to the moon." So they locked the Cowboys in the shed and took Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle into the house and gave them a good dinner.

COMMON SENSE in the HOME
EDITED by MARION HARLAND

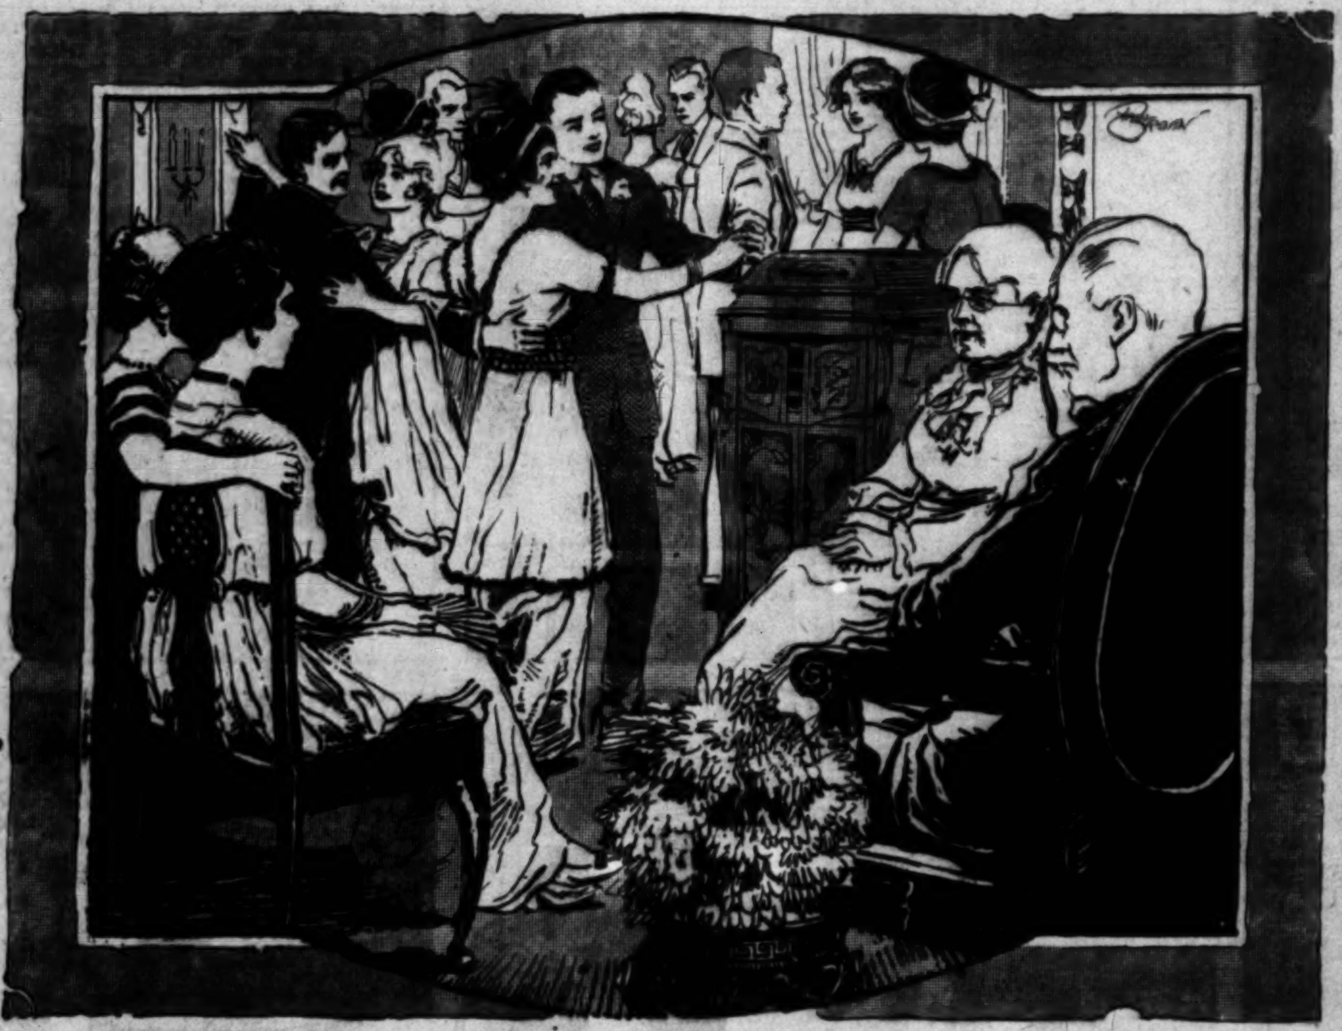
NEED OF A CHAPERON.

THE following letter from a correspondent may be of interest to the mothers of sons as well as of daughters:

"I would like to ask your opinion on a matter which has just come to my attention. A neighbor of mine has a daughter 17 years old who is still in school, although she goes about a good deal to dances and to the theater. Still she is not yet 'out.' Last week her mother gave a dinner party for her to a dozen of the girl's young friends, boys and girls of about the same age as herself.

"That was all very well, but here comes in the queer part of it. The girl's father and mother stayed in the house to receive the guests when they came and then went out themselves to dinner, for the express purpose of leaving the young people free to do as they chose. I know this to be a fact, for the mother told me of it herself. She said, 'I don't know what John and I will do—dine at a restaurant, I suppose, and go to the theater afterward, but we don't want to be there to be an embargo on the young people's fun.' The dinner was to be followed by dancing.

"Now I suppose I am an awful back number, but that proceeding seemed strange to me and I made up my mind I would write to you and ask you what you think of it. I'm not a crank about chaperons, for I think nice young people can generally be trusted to behave themselves without being watched and that there isn't much sense in always having a chaperon along when a party of them goes off together. But I know when I was a girl I would have been much happier and more comfortable if my father and mother had been present at such a dinner as this of my neighbor's, and I am also sure that when my little 8 year old daughter has reached the age when she has company to dine I shall take it for granted that my husband and I shall be in our places at the head and foot of the table. I don't mean that she and her friends wouldn't behave well unless we were there, but only that I see no reason why we should be banished on such an occasion. What are your views in the matter? MATRON."



At the risk of including myself with my correspondent as a "back number" in the eyes of a more up to date contingent I must say that I agree with her absolutely. More than that, I don't think it is decent or well bred for the parents to absent themselves from the house at such a function and I consider that their doing it displays a woeful lack of the knowledge of the usages of polite society.

I do not think "Matron" means quite what she says when she implies that chaperons are personages who are provided for the purpose of watching young people and seeing that they behave properly. To my mind the office of the chaperone is something quite different. I once heard a lively young girl refer to a chaperon as "something quite different. I tion or first aid to the injured kit," and I have never forgotten the whimsical characterization. The chaperon's principal function is to be on hand to relieve the young people under her charge of possible embarrassment and to help them out of difficulties.

For instance, half a dozen boys and girls between the ages of 16 and 20 went out one day for a boating trip in a motor boat. They took their luncheon along, and as they expected to be back in time for dinner they declared a chaperon would not be needed. In the middle of the afternoon the engine suddenly gave out when they were in the midst of the lake, a mile or more from land. A breeze sprang up and the water became quite rough. The boat was in no real danger, but it was not safe for any one of the boys to attempt to swim to land for assistance.

So there they stayed until 3 o'clock the next morning. A couple of the girls became hysterical and all of them were miserably unhappy and uncomfortable. Their rescue was finally effected by the aid of a lone fisherman on the shore, who heard their shouts for help and reported them to some one with a boat, who went to their aid.

Now, as a matter of course I do not mean to intimate that if a chaperon had been along she could have repaired the machine or sent a wireless message for assistance. From a material point of view she might not have been able to do anything for them. All the same, the moral effect of her presence would have been strong. If she had been the right sort of person she would have kept her head enough to soothe the frightened girls, and the very knowledge that some one was in the party who had age and experience would have been an incalculable comfort to all concerned, to say nothing of her presence being of value from a social point of view and as a means of putting a check upon unkind gossip from censorious persons who heard of the circumstance.

Again and again I have known of occurrences like this when the chaperon has been a tower of refuge to a girl who was not well or who had had a slight accident to her dress or to herself. The young people of the party may be all one could desire in correctness of conviction and of conduct, but their lack of experience handicaps them when unexpected exigencies arise.

So I am heartily in favor of the chaperon and I have seldom known well brought up lads and girls who did not prefer to have one of the right sort along to take the responsibility and serve as a reference in emergencies. I have chaperoned parties to the theater, to sports of various kinds, on long evening and daytime rides, on picnics, and many other forms of amusement and I have never seen any reason why one holding such a position should be a spoilsport. The properly behaved young people do not object to her presence; the ill behaved, if there are such, certainly need her as a protection against themselves and their own foolishness.

When it comes to chaperoning a pair of young people to the theater or to a social affair of any kind, customs differ in different places and in various circles of society. In some large cities and in the most fashionable sections of those cities a chaperon is considered indispensable in almost any conditions. For example, a young man cannot take a young woman to the theater without a chaperon. Still less can he escort her to a dance or evening party of any kind unless some older person goes along.

I have known numbers of places where this would be accounted absurd, but the fact remains that in most of our so-called "best society" some one is in attendance upon a girl when she goes to an evening gathering. Either a maid takes her there and comes for her, or her father or other man relative escorts her to and from the affair. Never is it left to chance with whom she shall return home.

Here again a good deal of possible annoyance is saved a girl. I have known cases where a young woman has trusted that she would either have some man offer to escort her home or could depend upon friends who might be going her way and has been left in an embarrassing position by the failure of her plans. In such conditions as these the thought that there is a chaperon upon whom she can rely is a great comfort.

Again I must say that circumstances vary greatly in different parts of the country. In a small town, where every one knows every one else and all the young people in society have grown up together there is not the need felt for such chaperonage that prevails in [illegible] with a floating population, [illegible] meets socially strangers [illegible] background by which judgment [illegible] made as to whether they are [illegible] as companions and escorts. [illegible] it is far better to err in the [illegible] tion and to be too careful [illegible] the risk of being placed in [illegible] stances which will cause [illegible] provoke [illegible] or harsh [illegible]

To come back for a moment [illegible] ter of the dinner. I wish I [illegible] about it and the people [illegible] it than my correspondent [illegible] can hardly think that the [illegible] be of the variety who would [illegible] bargo upon the freedom of the [illegible] guests, or they would not [illegible] absent themselves so [illegible] own part I should think [illegible] joy meeting the friends of [illegible] and making them welcome [illegible]

On the other hand, was it [illegible] ter's suggestion that the [illegible] mother should not be present [illegible] tivity? In that case I [illegible] there was need of a chaperon [illegible] not hold the training of [illegible] high esteem if it could [illegible] that it was the correct [illegible] entertain a party at dinner [illegible] person was present to [illegible] occasion.

One of the criticisms [illegible] uttered upon American [illegible] eign visitors is that it is [illegible] raw, because the older [illegible] ished from it just when they [illegible] the age when their [illegible] servation are ripe and [illegible] and interest. An instance [illegible] to prove the point.

Curiously enough, I [illegible] dent only yesterday [illegible] opposite point of view. [illegible] woman of 35 who [illegible] dine with her. After [illegible] dinner, were settled [illegible] "Dear, I think I will [illegible] in my own room [illegible] your friends are [illegible] will be better, [illegible] be present."

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING HAND.

Crippled by Rheumatism.

"I WRITE to ask you if there is a society or mission that would give a rolling chair for an invalid who is crippled by rheumatism. She has not walked in five or six years and is a pitiful looking object. Her health is bad in other respects and she suffers much from indigestion. When she has to be moved for any purpose her daughter has to lift her and she must be placed in an ordinary rocking chair to rest her from the bed. It is wearing on the daughter and both are in poor circumstances and cannot afford to hire help to assist in the care of the mother. The kind of chair needed is the sort that can be put back so as to make a couch effect in order that she will not have to be lifted up and down so much. She does not want a fine chair, just one that is good and strong. The name of the sufferer who needs the chair is Mrs. H. H. G. "A FRIEND."

Such an appeal as this always touches me deeply. Illness and helplessness are hard enough to bear in the most favorable conditions, but what must they be to a woman situated as this one is, poor, suffering, dependent upon others for everything, apparently unable to do anything for herself? I wish with all my heart I knew of some society or mission which could supply her with a chair, but although there are such agencies in some of our large cities nothing of the kind exists, so far as I know, which can undertake to send chairs to invalids living in the country. The only hope is that some generous soul who sees this letter may know of some one who has such a chair as is needed to give away. It does not need to be new or elegant. One which has been used before would answer, so long as it was in good repair. I trust most fervently that the request may come to the knowledge of some one who can not only give the chair or tell where it may be procured, but will also be able to defray the expense of sending it to the place where it is so much needed. In writing for the address to which the chair should go, please ask for Mrs. H. H. G.

Dumplings with Chicken.

"I had not noticed your call for 'John's favorite dish,' as my John is not overparticular about his food. I don't think he cares more for one dish than he does for another, but my whole family like best a stew of some sort, with dumplings. Our chickens must always be cooked with dumplings; no other way pleases the family so much. Besides veal and mutton or lamb stew, I use the leftovers from pot roasts, which have such good gravy. My dumplings are seldom if ever heavy and that is why they are liked so well, and I will tell you how I make them. I use a teaspoon of baking powder to each cup of flour and a little salt, sifting them several times; add enough water to make the paste like a soft biscuit dough, but not too soft. Half an hour before the stew is ready I drop in the dough by the tablespoonfuls. There must be an abundance of gravy, as the dumplings take up at least half of it. Boil slowly, with the cover on, after the dumplings go in, and don't remove the cover for at least twenty or thirty minutes. I put in the dumplings at the same time I do the potatoes; then both get done at the same time. The stew must be boiling when the dumplings go in. The dish scorches easily, so it must be watched, and that is also one reason why there must be plenty of the gravy to start with. Please tell Mrs. S. O. S. that Aunt Maud did not know of the little pocket of musk in the rabbit's hind leg. Friends of mine who raise rabbits to sell say they know nothing about it either. Maybe it is low on the leg, but we always cut off the first joint and throw it away. Won't she please explain more about it? AUNT MAUD."

We are grateful for the instructions as to the dumplings. There is no excuse, to my mind, for any one not to have success who follows a recipe so carefully given. As to the rabbit's hind leg and the pocket of musk I must refer to those who are better scholars in this line of natural history than I am. My regret is equal to that of Aunt Maud that I cannot comply with her request relative to the addresses of those whose appeals for assistance appear in the Corner. The rule of the paper is against it and it is a matter which lies outside my jurisdiction. I may say, however, that many of the letters come from small places, and the appearance of the name of the locality, when accompanied by the initials of the correspondent, would be equivalent to advertising her needs among her fellow-townspeople. A large number of the letters which we receive contain the plea that neither the name nor the place of residence be mentioned. Often one is willing to make her wants known to complete strangers who would shrink from publishing them among her neighbors.

An Unfortunate Oversight.

"Will you please send me the address of the woman wishing contributions toward a layette? Her husband was out of work. The notice appeared several weeks ago. MRS. C. A. P."

I wish with all my heart that I could grant your request, but it is impossible through your failure to send the signature appended to the letter when it appeared in the Corner. With the hundreds of letters we have on file and the long list of names in our card catalogue it is absolutely necessary to have something more than a mere description of the want expressed in order to give you the correct name and address of the writer. I am very sorry. Your contribution was welcome and will appear elsewhere. Thank you.

To Raise Calves to Sell.

"For a long time I have wanted much to have a fine Jersey cow or some other kind of registered stock, so that I could raise calves for sale and make a living more easily than I do now. I have to depend largely on my own exertions and I am compelled to do often the work usually considered heavy even for a man, so that my health has suffered severely from my exertions. I am afraid the request for such a cow is too much to ask, but I wonder if I could not, through the kindness of some one, secure a heifer calf to start with. Or if this seems too great a demand I would much like a pair of pigs or even a setting of thoroughbred turkey or fine chicken eggs. I have thought that perhaps on a farm where every one had a great deal there might be some kind person inclined to help me out so that I could better help myself. "VIRGINIA."

At the first glance it seems a good deal to ask for a cow or a pair of pigs, but when I recall the gifts that have been made through the Corner, the prompt response to more important requests than these, I feel it is worth while to print the above letter on the chance that one at least of the boons craved by Virginia may be granted to her. I hope most earnestly that her desire may be satisfied and her lot rendered easier.

Needs Chair to Get Outdoors.

"Here I come again, Frances, the crippled shut-in, with a song in her heart. The words of my song today are words of love and thanks to the dear Helping Hand Corner. I wish you could read some of the dear letters I have received, and I am going to answer them all as soon as I can get to it. I sent the roll of embroidery patterns to the address you sent, and you can send me any names that come to you for patterns, for as yet I have had no letters for them, only letters of love and cheer. I think each one who is interested in the Helping Hand Corner should make an appeal to the paper for more space. Let's all get busy. I think the Corner should have more room to do good in. Spring is here, and the flowers are out, and I, too, long to get out. I wonder if there is not a wheeled chair stowed away in some home and forgotten that I might have—an easy running one, with rubber tires. You see, my spine is sore. Then I could be out with 'God in His out of doors.' You know I always feel nearer to Him out under the sky. I just received some dainty hand painted cards, with such helpful verses written on them. They have no name attached to them. Can you give me any idea of who sent them that I may thank her? Good luck to you! FRANCES."

This is a lovely letter, and the beautiful cheer and helpfulness it breathes throughout put to shame the lack of content many of us who are well and strong often display. I am sure the offer of patterns will be gratefully accepted by some of our readers, and I am glad to take this chance of expressing my own thanks to the many who have written the "dear letters" to which Frances refers. I am sorry I cannot give her the name and address of the friend, and regret even more that the exigencies of space forbid me to print the charming and helpful verses she sends. The stanzas I give below are all I have room to use.

MY RAINY DAY THOUGHTS.

Outside the sky is darkened,
  And I look for the blue in vain;
Inside my heart is a-weary
  And my body is racked with pain.

In the midst of the pain and heartache
  There comes a glad refrain:
'Tis a dear little robin, God bless him!
  A-singing through the rain.

And my heart, too, starts to singing,
  Yes, singing through all the pain,
Just as the robin is singing,
  Singing through the rain."

I will keep the other verses for my own personal comfort and joy. I hope she may receive the wheeled chair she craves.

An Offer and a Request.

"Your Corner has been a great help to me and through you I have made some dear pen friends that I shall always prize and that have been such a help to the children and to me. Now I come to you with an offer and also with a request. I will gladly send canna lilies or chrysanthemum lilies or chrysanthemums (plants) to any one who will send postage, or I will try to find for the Cornerites any wild flowers that they want, as we live almost in the woods, among the hills. As to my request: Has any one pieces suitable for patchwork which she can spare? My little girls and I are trying to earn a little by quilt making. The children are learning to sew and to put things together with good taste. C. M. S."

This is a tempting offer and I am sure it will be met with enthusiasm. I trust the response and the gift of the quilt pieces may be as prompt and as cordial. At this time of year, when dressmaking is going on, there are sure to be pieces and remnants which will work well into quilt making. I must not omit to say a word of thanks for the cordial salutations which I value none the less because I do not put them on the printed page. They are recorded on my heart.

Loves the Violin.

"If there is a Cornerite who has a violin that is not in use and will kindly pass it on to me I will do anything in my power in return. FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN suggested colors for the design, there is no reason why all-white should not be used if a woman does not care to use a colored centerpiece on her dining table.

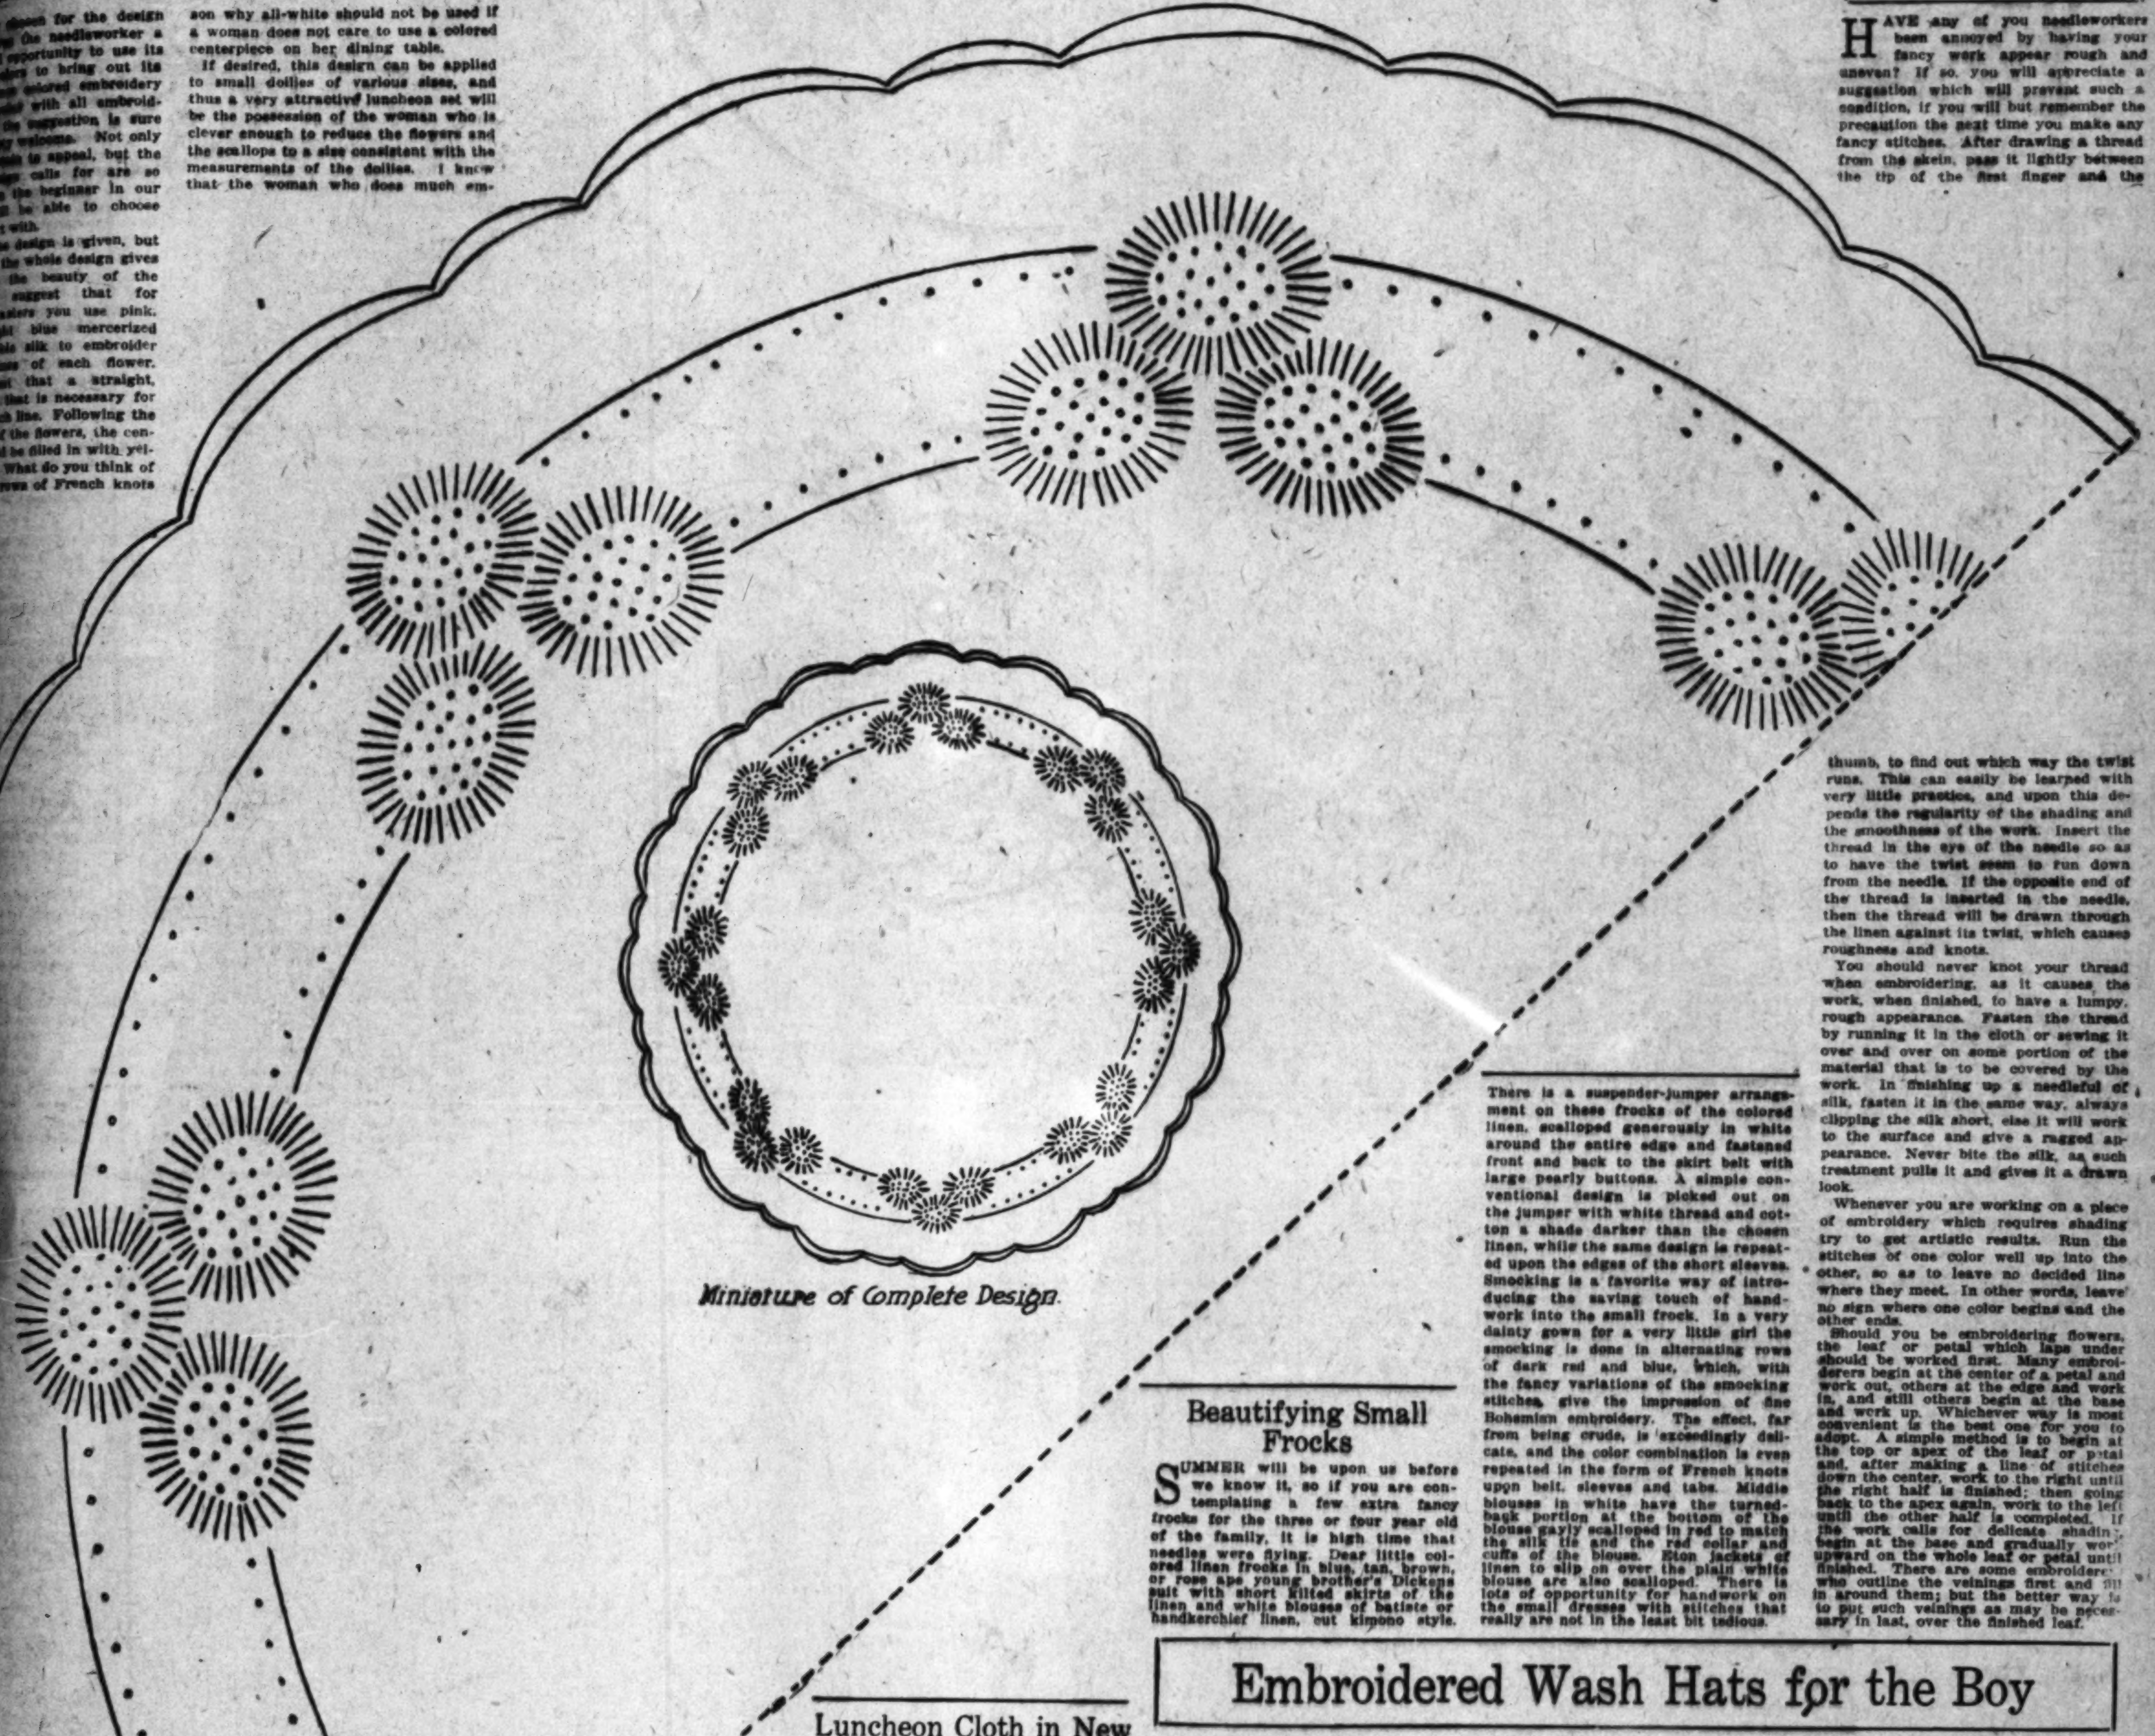
If desired, this design can be applied to small doilies of various sizes, and thus a very attractive luncheon set will be the possession of the woman who is clever enough to reduce the flowers and the scallops to a size consistent with the measurements of the doilies. I know that the woman who does much embroidering usually has on hand a collection of embroidery designs, so that among them she will find a scallop that will suit the purpose in this instance. It really doesn't matter so very much if the scallop of the centerpiece is different from the edge of the smaller pieces.

Another use to which the asters can be put is to form a trimming on a hat. If four groups of the flowers are placed at opposite points around the crown of the hat, and if the flowers are worked in the colors suggested for the centerpiece, the result is sure to prove satisfactory.



Miniature of Complete Design.

Half of Design

How to Transfer

PLACE a sheet of impression carbon paper between your fabric and the newspaper design, the latter on top. With a sharp pencil or a glass-pointed pen go over the outline. The design will be transferred to the material.

Handy Case

FROM a piece of ribbon ten inches long and three inches wide a most convenient case for the traveling girl can be made. The ribbon is lined with a piece of canton flannel or eiderdown, one end of which is turned up for two inches, stitched along the sides and through the middle to form two pockets. The one pocket is intended to hold a tiny vanity mirror, the other is to contain a little powder puff and bag combined.

This combination is made of two circular pieces of eiderdown about one and one-half inches in diameter. The two circles are stitched around the entire circumference, save for a space measuring a fraction of an inch. Into the bag thus formed face powder is poured. When powder is needed the bag can be used as a puff, for the material is of such a nature that the powder will easily sift through when the bag is patted against the face.

Along the other stretch of canton flannel, which lines the bag, a piece of ribbon 1½ inches wide is stitched at various intervals. In one division, made by the stitching, invisible hairpins are placed; in another a bodkin is put. On either side of the strip of ribbon safety-pins of all sizes are fastened.

When the case is fully equipped it can be rolled up and tied with a piece of ribbon, which is stitched to the upper flap of the case.

Such a novelty might prove a suggestion for a favor for guests attending a luncheon given in honor of a girl who is to travel.

Luncheon Cloth in New Design

MOST unique is a luncheon cloth, circular in design, but so made that sections are provided for doilies beneath four individual plates. The model offers a splendid opportunity to use odd pieces of linen. It consists of linen cut in five squares and four quarters of a circle. One square is placed in the center, while the other four squares are placed directly opposite each of the four sides of the center square, but far enough away to allow a strip of two-inch-wide cluny insertion to be run between the edges of the squares. In a diagonal line from the four points of the center square are placed the four quarters of a circle, filling in the corners left by the crossing of the cluny lace stripe. Each of the squares and quarters of linen is ornamented with a cross-stitch design worked in a combination of blues, purples and greens. The luncheon cloth is bound by an edging of the cluny lace.

For the Toys

SHOO! Chase the children out of doors this lovely weather. Let them take all the toys they possess. This will be the means of keeping them on the porch. To make it unnecessary for the children to drag the toys in and out of the house, make a receptacle into which the youngsters can put their possessions when playtime is over. A most convenient receptacle can be made by tacking stout oilcloth or denim to the side of the house. If the entire railing of the porch is protected from the rain, it might be well to cover it all with the material used for the receptacle. Provide sufficient material to form a flap and furnish the flap and the pocket with snap fasteners so that the contents of the receptacle can be snapped out of sight and the porch will present a neat appearance.

An old raincoat might be used for the toy receptacle. It will prove durable and water-proof. It is advisable to make the pocket very deep so that toys of all sizes can be tucked into it.

Beautifying Small Frocks

SUMMER will be upon us before we know it, so if you are contemplating a few extra fancy frocks for the three or four year old of the family, it is high time that needles were flying. Dear little colored linen frocks in blue, tan, brown, or rose ape young brother's Dickens suit with short kilted skirts of the linen and white blouses of batiste or handkerchief linen, cut kimono style.

There is a suspender-jumper arrangement on these frocks of the colored linen, scalloped generously in white around the entire edge and fastened front and back to the skirt belt with large pearly buttons. A simple conventional design is picked out on the jumper with white thread and cotton a shade darker than the chosen linen, while the same design is repeated upon the edges of the short sleeves. Smocking is a favorite way of introducing the saving touch of handwork into the small frock. In a very dainty gown for a very little girl the smocking is done in alternating rows of dark red and blue, which, with the fancy variations of the smocking stitches, give the impression of fine Bohemian embroidery. The effect, far from being crude, is exceedingly delicate, and the color combination is even repeated in the form of French knots upon belt, sleeves and tabs. Middie blouses in white have the turned-back portion at the bottom of the blouse gayly scalloped in red to match the silk tie and the red collar and cuffs of the blouse. Eton jackets of linen to slip on over the plain white blouse are also scalloped. There is lots of opportunity for handwork on the small dresses with stitches that really are not in the least bit tedious.

Varied Hints to Embroiderers

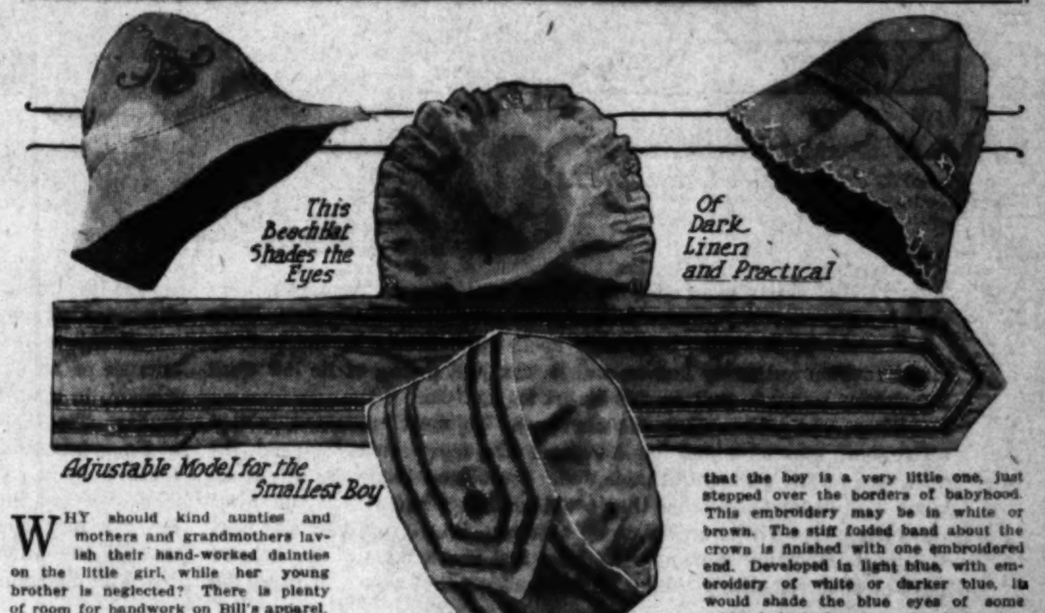
HAVE any of you needleworkers been annoyed by having your fancy work appear rough and uneven? If so, you will appreciate a suggestion which will prevent such a condition, if you will but remember the precaution the next time you make any fancy stitches. After drawing a thread from the skein, pass it lightly between the tip of the first finger and the thumb, to find out which way the twist runs. This can easily be learned with very little practice, and upon this depends the regularity of the shading and the smoothness of the work. Insert the thread in the eye of the needle so as to have the twist seem to run down from the needle. If the opposite end of the thread is inserted in the needle, then the thread will be drawn through the linen against its twist, which causes roughness and knots.

You should never knot your thread when embroidering, as it causes the work, when finished, to have a lumpy, rough appearance. Fasten the thread by running it in the cloth or sewing it over and over on some portion of the material that is to be covered by the work. In finishing up a needleful of silk, fasten it in the same way, always clipping the silk short, else it will work to the surface and give a ragged appearance. Never bite the silk, as such treatment pulls it and gives it a drawn look.

Whenever you are working on a piece of embroidery which requires shading try to get artistic results. Run the stitches of one color well up into the other, so as to leave no decided line where they meet. In other words, leave no sign where one color begins and the other ends.

Should you be embroidering flowers, the leaf or petal which laps under should be worked first. Many embroiderers begin at the center of a petal and work out, others at the edge and work in, and still others begin at the base and work up. Whichever way is most convenient is the best one for you to adopt. A simple method is to begin at the top or apex of the leaf or petal and, after making a line of stitches down the center, work to the right until the right half is finished; then going back to the apex again, work to the left until the other half is completed. If the work calls for delicate shading, begin at the base and gradually work upward on the whole leaf or petal until finished. There are some embroiderers who outline the veinings first and fill in around them; but the better way is to put such veinings as may be necessary in last, over the finished leaf.

Embroidered Wash Hats for the Boy



This Beach Hat Shades the Eyes

Of Dark Linen and Practical

Adjustable Model for the Smallest Boy

WHY should kind aunties and mothers and grandmothers lavish their hand-worked dainties on the little girl, while her young brother is neglected? There is plenty of room for handwork on Bill's apparel, if he wants it, and he is not likely to object under the magnificent age of 4. The promising young financier of 3 and every future president of the country requires as careful grooming now as when he shall reach the pinnacle designed for him by mother's fond ambition. Until he reaches the cap-doffing stage, he may sport a hint of hand embroidery on his summer headgear; but it should on no account be of the fluffy, feminine variety, nor should lace or ribbon be tolerated any more than long curls.

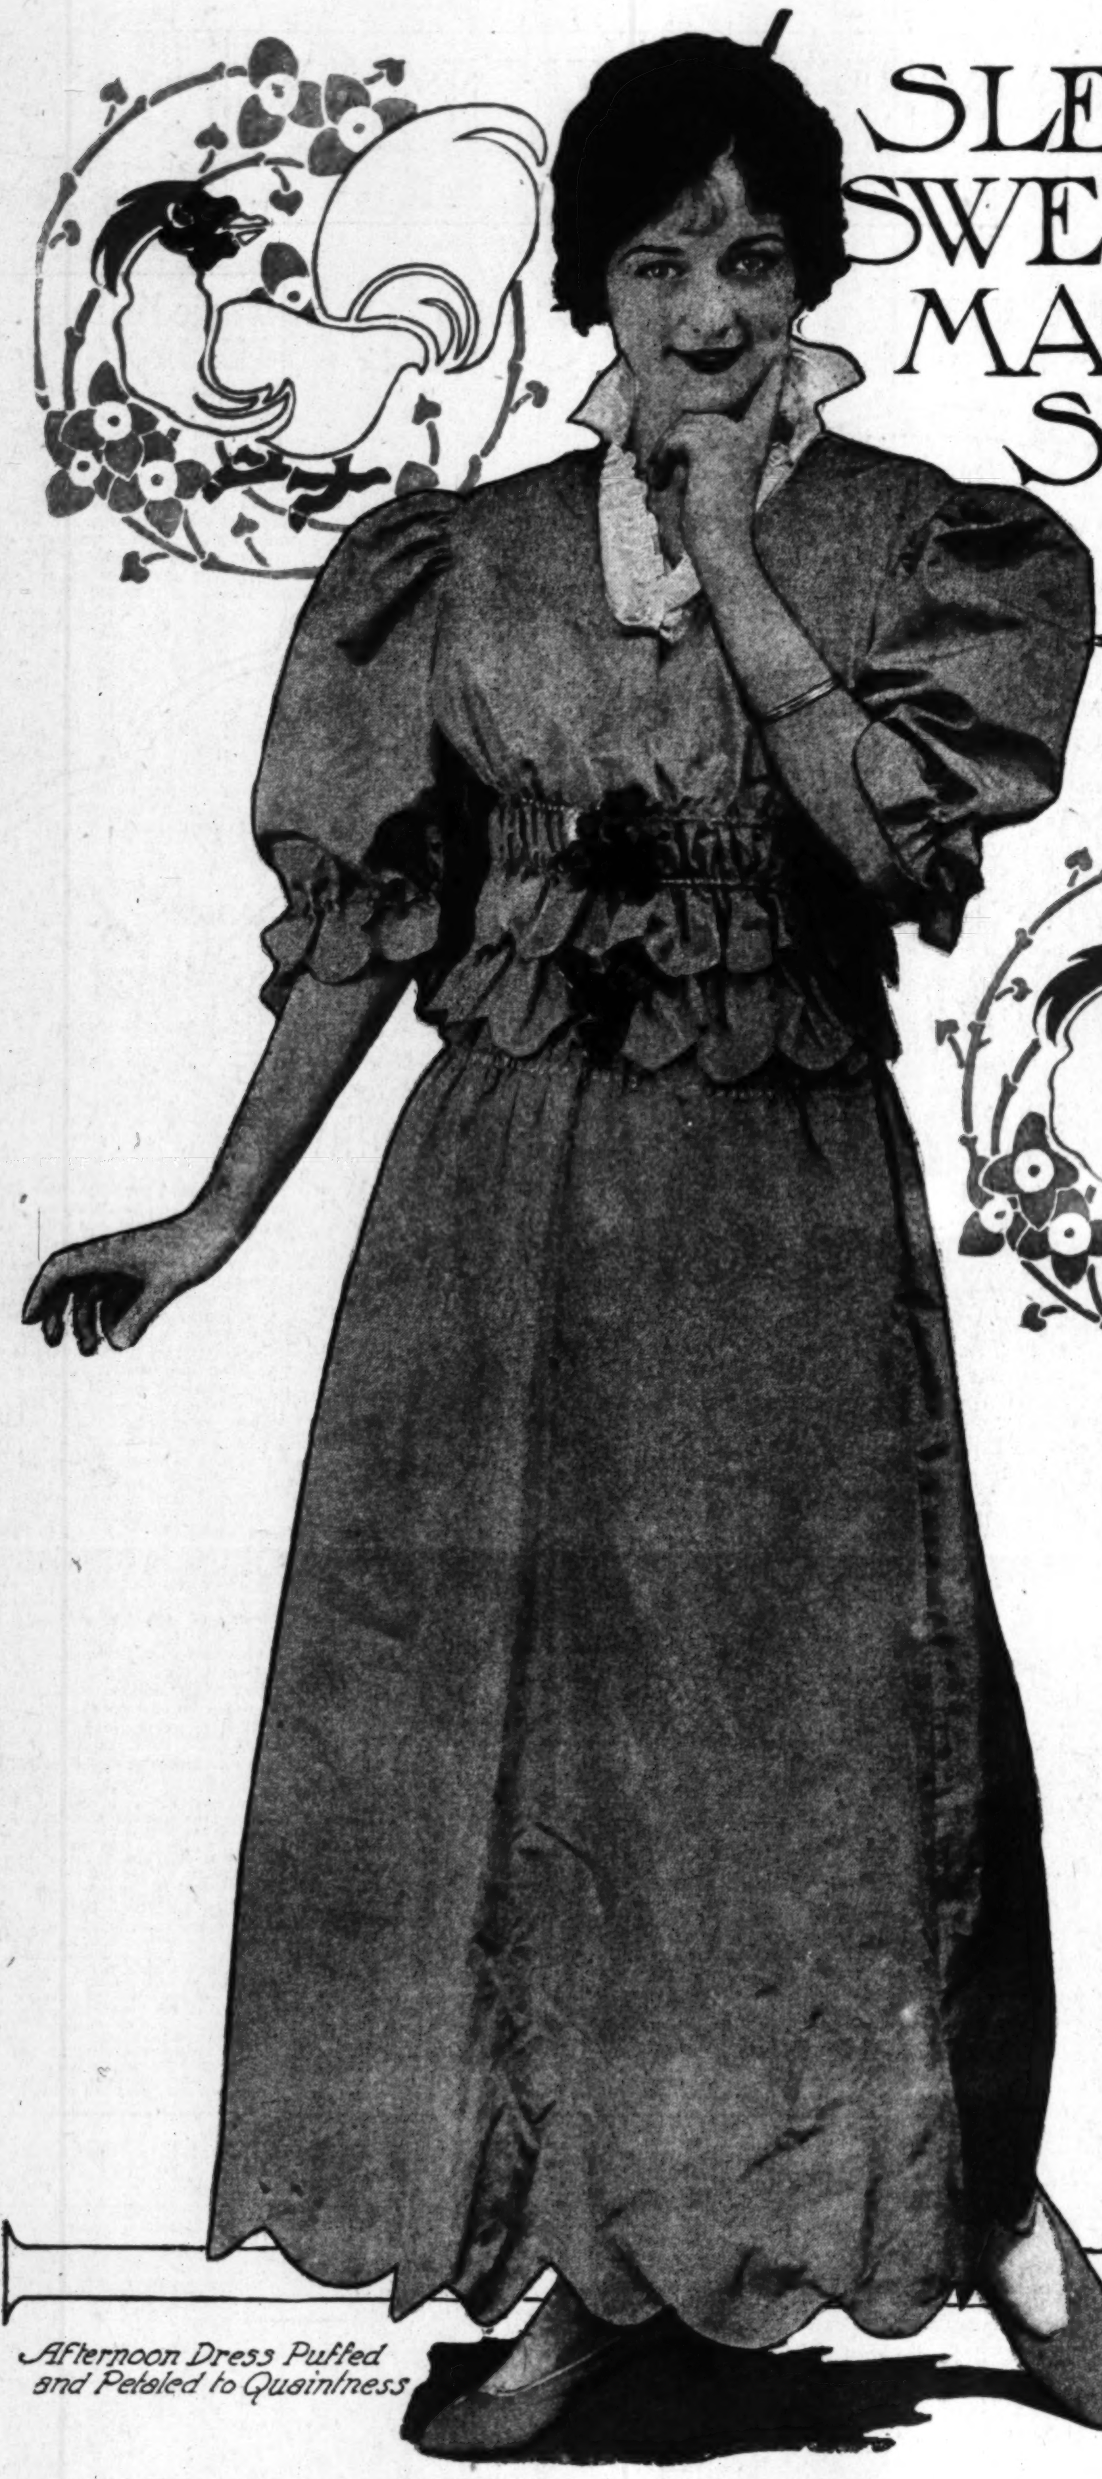
The practical little cap that opens into a straight piece for the laundry tub seems almost as if designed for the proverbially dirty boy. At any rate, its simplicity offers a few minutes saved at the ironing board, which is a big consideration on a hot summer's afternoon. It is fashioned of fine white rep. The band is double and about three inches in width, while the crown is cut in one with the outer thickness of the band, and faced to admit of a confining rubber. By an ingenious placing of snap fasteners the crown is snapped into place on the band, which is fastened at one side by the same method. It should be carefully measured to the youngster's head, with a generous allowance of lap for the almost miraculous growth that most boys show at this early age. The crown size is regulated by the rubber band, so that it may stretch with the lengthening of the band, thus requiring only the adjustment of the one set of fasteners on the band itself to make the cap an inch or more larger. This model is a very good step from the ribbon or string tied baby cap, as it more nearly resembles the younger model—without the strings, of course. The embroidery is of the simplest, being but two narrow bands outlined in white and filled in with diagonal stitches of coarse blue or red floss.

Can't you see a little round, open-mouthed, freckled face and straight sandy hair under the brown linen cap? It just reeks boy from brim to crown. Even the embroidered edge does not spoil the effect, for it merely suggests that the boy is a very little one, just stepped over the borders of babyhood. This embroidery may be in white or brown. The stiff folded band about the crown is finished with one embroidered end. Developed in light blue, with embroidery of white or darker blue, it would shade the blue eyes of some golden-haired cherub to the distraction of all beholders. Make the crown in four sections and stitch them by machine. The brim is partly circular and joined with a French seam at the back. It should droop comfortably over the eyes, but not enough to annoy the child.

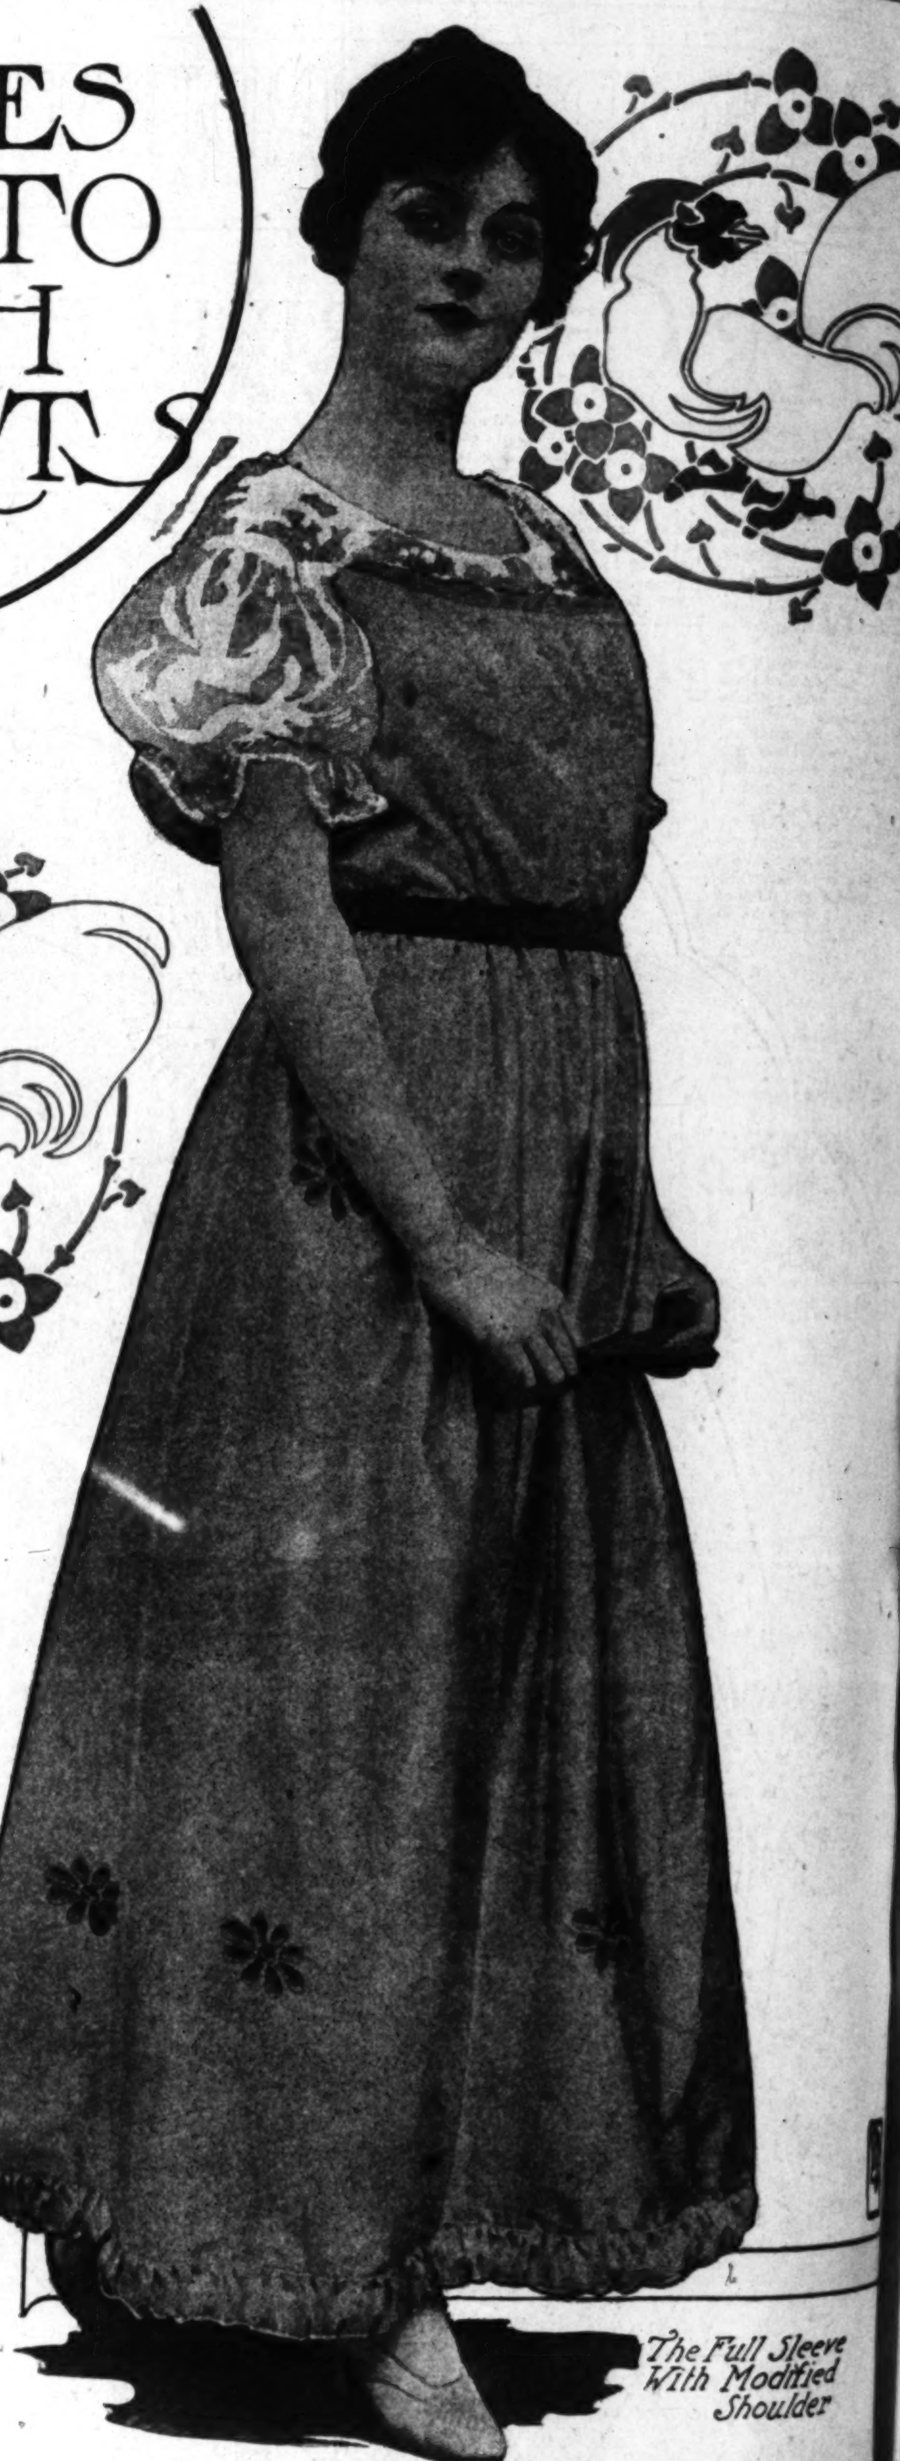
The third model is made from white pique and can be developed into more of a shade hat than the other two. The brim is oddly shaped, with two points over the ears, and gives splendid protection to the neck in back. It is decidedly a beach hat for sunny mornings. Each of the four panels is embroidered with a conventional motif in white and a color. Red on white always seems appropriate for the small boy, but blue and white is also good. The brim is double, and when stiffly starched will stand out as if made of straw.

Make your boy one of these sensible little wash hats. It takes but such a little time and material, and you will have the satisfaction of feeling that he is as well and appropriately dressed, as to hats at least, as if they had been purchased at some smart juvenile shop.

SLEEVES SWELL TO MATCH SKIRTS



Afternoon Dress Puffed and Petaled to Quaintness



The Full Sleeve With Modified Shoulder

WHILE skirts grew steadily voluminous, sleeves remained sturdily narrow, comparatively, for a most commendable time. Wide skirts, however, invariably spell wide sleeves in the end, as every fashion authority knows, and it was just a case of lie low until the sleeves began to puff up and assert themselves.

There was a time when the sleeve was the most important part of attire, both masculine and feminine, and was, more often than not, the only part of the garment ornamented. Sometimes two pairs of sleeves came with one gown, so that they could be changed at will, as one nowadays changes a girdle or ribbon on a frock. So, if you once had been the most important part of something and you suddenly saw another part of that something taking on proportions that you considered far beyond its station in life, you'd begin, too, to puff yourself into noticeable size, wouldn't you?

It was in 1830 that sleeves attained their fullest glory, and the assurance of an old designer, "O sleeve! O sleeve! I'll study all night, madam, to magnify your sleeves!" must, from old prints, have been a reality. The 1830 sleeve assumed balloonlike proportions when short and at times tapered into a tightness at the wrist to form the famous leg-o'-mutton sleeve. It was then the fashion for the sleeves to extend sufficiently beyond the shoulder line that the sleeve and hem of the full flaring skirt were on an exact line. Epaulettes and cascades of lace were draped and piled upon them, ruffles, flounces, etc., etc., etc.

The charming afternoon frock of pale green soft taffeta shown is puffed and petaled to attractive quaintness, and the swelling clearly defined. Though femininity balks at the swelling sleeve, designers are evidently endeavoring to make it in such fascinating that it will prove irresistible. Cream-color embroidery relieves neck, and the whole is given a pretty note of contrast by the intr tion of the pink corsage flowers and their accompanying green foli

A more conservative model is shown in the sleeve having a mod shoulder. While many women have no objection to the full sleeve, dislike the awkwardness of line formed by a jutting puff from shoulder, without the softening line of shirring or the long shoulder. The net puff, too, is less conspicuous than a puff of or stiffer material. Character is given the frock by the belt of velvet. The full sleeve is here!

NOW IS THE TIME TO PLANT

Choice Summer Flowers

We call your attention to the adaptability of the following flowering plants for the production of a glorious show of color in your Summer and Autumn garden. Planted NOW they will come into bloom within a few weeks, and continue with an uninterrupted display of color right up to Winter.

Crimson Fountain Grass

A magnificent new grass with foliage and stems of a deep bronzy red, with long tassel like plumes of rich crimson color. A beautiful effect may be had by using it in conjunction with Cannas for bedding purposes. The plants attain a height of six feet. The plants are graceful and drooping in character. Splendid for mixing with cut flowers in vases, etc. Edge your Canna bed with them if you want a dainty effect.

Price, strong young plants, each 20c; per dozen $2.00.

Sweet Pea Exhibit

On Monday, May 24, we will have a display of the latest and finest novelties in Sweet Peas on exhibition at our salesrooms, Ninth and Olive streets. If you are interested in seeing the wonderful work which has been accomplished in the improvement of this favorite flower, drop in. The varieties on exhibit will all be named and from the display you will be able to gain a good idea as to the varieties which will best meet your requirements for sowing during the coming Autumn. They are something fine. Orders will be booked for seed for Autumn delivery.

NEW CANNAS

Have you seen the latest improvements in these splendid bedding plants? If not, a splendid surprise is in store for you. The blooms are of mammoth size with a wide range of brilliant colors. Perhaps you have a warm, sunny bed and are wondering what to fill it with. Try the following collection. They will more than please you:

THE CITY AND THE COAST.

THE San Bernardino Mountain Crest Highway now carries the public 101 miles along the "rim of the world." This is one of the most beautiful scenic boulevards in California, which is to say that it is one of the loveliest on earth. California cannot offer too many splendid drives for her automobilists at home and for the tourists who bring their machines here.

DENVER'S college has decided to bar co-eds, notwithstanding the fact that 249 young women helped to swell the roster of that institution this year. Colorado may be able to get away with that sort of thing, but California could not. When the subject was broached at Occidental last year, the result was a storm as big as a war cloud in Europe.

DOWN in one of the refrigerating chambers of a local ice concern fifty guests sat through a "North Pole luncheon." It is all right to shiver for a half an hour as a novelty, but thank heaven, no one in Southern California is ever compelled to do anything of the sort against his will.

JUDGING by the number of Governors of other States and the big executives accompanying them, who have lately come to California to visit the two fairs, it will not be long until Los Angeles has a great many more of America's most prominent people as new citizens.

A HEN in a Southern California town lost her chickens and adopted a choice litter of kittens. She ought to be thankful thta they are not young coyotes or baby mountain lions.

America After the War.

IN THE TIMES recently a German of high standing, and that means of great intelligence, expressed the opinion that his country was determined to draw the United States into the war, on the side of Germany's enemies rather than not at all. His reason was seemingly logical. He said that Europe would be bankrupt by the war, and that unless America was drawn in and forced to spend her money she would have the world by the tail (if the expression may be used,) industrially and commercially.

There is no doubt of the depletion of the private and public funds of Europe by the war now going on. On the first of May the war loans on both sides of the conflict aggregated $9,613,400,000, and it is costing perhaps $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 a day every day the war continues. The annual savings of Great Britain are guessed to be about $2,000,000,000 a year, but the war is costing that country in an excess of imports over exports a sum quite equal to her annual net savings. The kingdom has already spent more than she has saved in a year, and will spend two or three times as much before the war is over.

The financial condition of the banks of Europe is astonishing in the face of the war. The circulation and deposits of the different banks in Europe, a dozen of them, on the first of May, 1915, amounted to $9,249,585,000, or more than twice as much as on the same date a year ago. Not only this, but the gold holdings of the different banks, a dozen of them again, have increased greatly during the war. At the present time there are $3,103,500,000, compared with a year ago $2,462,150,000.

The people have been very patriotic in all the countries engaged in the war, and have freely given up their real money to the government to back the conflict. England is the only one of the belligerents getting much gold from her mines. The Bank of England receives approximately $20,000,000 per month of new gold from mines in the different parts of the empire.

The public in the different warring countries are not only giving up their real money to the government to meet the expenses of the war, but they must be lending their credit as a basis for government credit. Of course, this is what is known in banking circles as pyramiding, a dangerous proceeding which unless watched closely will lead to terrible disaster in time. In any case, all Europe will be practically bankrupt by the time the war is over, however soon that may be.

Our own financial system is very different, indeed. While the war has checked business in some respects in the country it has stimulated it greatly in others. Exports for March of 1915 exceeded those for the same month of the previous year by $111,000,000. Imports fell off $24,500,000. The excess of exports over imports was $141,000,000, and for four months, December to March, our credit balance in foreign trade ran to $592,300,000. A draft on the United States is said to be good anywhere in the world, and the money market with us is peculiarly easy.

When the war ceases we shall be the only people on earth in a position to carry on our industries and commerce, and loan money to other nations among the whole family of nations.

The German quoted in the beginning of this article may have been right as to the wishes of his government. We do not know about that. But in any case, anyone who expects America to become exhausted of money during the war will surely be mistaken. It will be a very happy circumstance for the world if we have money to carry on our industries and commerce and to loan to those whose treasuries are depleted by the war.

Russia In The War.

THE opinion of the public is very naturally divided as to the achievements of the Russian armies in the terrible conflict involving nearly all of Europe. The evident fact is that Russian armies are accomplishing less than was expected of them by some, and more than was expected of them by others. Let us see why this is. It is competent to say that those who are not disappointed in the achievements of the Russian army are those who understand that country and its resources best.

At the outbreak of the war Germany had 5,200,000 men trained to war, Austria-Hungary 2,000,000, and Turkey 700,000, a total of 7,900,000. Russia had 5,500,000, France 4,000,000, Great Britain 730,000, and the Belgian army about 75,000, a total of 10,305,000.

The population of Germany is 65,000,000, of Austria-Hungary 50,000,000, the Turkish empire 20,000,000, a total of 135,000,000. The population of Russia alone is 160,000,000, or more than that of all the Teutons and their allies together, while Great Britain has a population of 45,000,000, and France of 40,000,000, making a total of 245,000,000, or nearly twice as many as the opponents of the allies.

As the war drags on and as it becomes more and more evident that it may not cease until the last man capable of bearing arms, the last horse and the last dollar are gone, the following figures become very enlightening, showing the available number of men on the two sides: Germany 7,800,000, Austria-Hungary 6,000,000, Turkey 2,400,000, a total of 16,200,000. The available arm-bearing men in Russia is far above the total of the three nations arrayed against the allies, for Russia has a possible army of 19,200,000. Add to this Great Britain's possible force, 5,400,000, and France's 4,800,000, it gives a total of 29,400,000.

To Russia was assigned by its allies the task of attacking the Teuton armies all along the frontier between Russia and Austria-Germany. The above figures will show the advantage the Muscovite armies had over their opponents, divided as they were in fighting the French-English allies in the west.

Those ill-acquainted with the situation expected the Russian armies to smash right through the Teuton enemy and reach Berlin and Vienna in a one, two, three order. They are still wondering why their expectations have not come to pass. It is not because Russia was not ready for the war as much as she intended to be, for she mobilized before Germany did. Nor is it because of the lack of virility or courage in the Russian soldier. Why was it?

A glance at the map of Russia compared with that of Germany-Austria, and a few figures answer the whole question. It was simply the lack of railroad facilities, of ammunition factories, and of thorough military drill in the order that these stand here. For the purpose of the comparison in mind, only Germany-Austria and Russia need to be taken. The total area of Germany-Austria is just a little short of 500,000 square miles. In that area the railroad systems measure in the two empires 65,565 miles. Now note the condition in Russia. Her territory comprises 8,647,657 square miles, and in that whole area the railroads measure only 47,893 miles. Not only are the railroads insufficient, but the common roads of Russia are about the worst in the world.

The German railroad system is about the best in the world, and the very best when one considers the adaptability of the system to the needs and purposes of war. The above figures show as a book of talk could not the lack of efficiency shown by the Russian armies in their conflict with the Teutonic powers.

Yesterday, Today, Tomorrow.

YESTERDAY, today and tomorrow in the life of an individual is seventy-two hours. We wish to write about the yesterday, today and tomorrow of Los Angeles. Let us conceive of yesterday as fifty years, her today as just the twenty-four hours in which we are living, and her tomorrow say a matter of a quarter of a century. This is not unreasonable, to take an hour of a human life for a year of a city's life.

There are many here now who can look back and picture Los Angeles as she was when the Civil War closed in 1865. The population was about 5000, of which a round thousand perhaps were native-born Americans. Right then the first boom in immigration came on, hundreds of people leaving the South where the war had impoverished them to seek their "old fortunes in a country new."

We all know from experience or from reading what has taken place in that half-century. Los Angeles has grown to be a city of more than half a million souls from an adobe town among the cow counties. The business fifty years ago was all done within a stone's throw of the Temple Block. It now stretches to the harbor twenty miles away and to the confines of Pasadena ten miles in the other direction.

It is of tomorrow that we wish to speak most particularly. What will Los Angeles be twenty-five years hence? The city at that time will include all of the territory below the mountains and this side of the San Gabriel River. It will be about as dense a piece of territory in population as the sun looks down upon. It will have a network of streets the finest in the world, aligned with the most magnificent residences of the rich and the most beautiful homes of the average people.

All we have to do is to set ourselves to thinking, and with our minds' eye illuminated by imagination we can see the future better than words could picture it. That there will be a million inhabitants in the territory outlined above is putting it exceedingly mildly. That figure is likely to be reached in less than ten years, and in twenty-five the population of the district, which will then be the city of Los Angeles, will be sure to reach the 2,000,000 mark.

It is the part of wisdom dictated by foresight that every person who possibly can should obtain a site for a home if it is only a small lot somewhere within the territory outlined in this article. The value of property is going to go up and up and up until it gets out of the reach of all but very wealthy people. And this is not only so of the territory outlined here, but is so in a very important way all over Southern California.

The government's new plan to encourage the use of national forests for recreation purposes by allowing thirty-year leases to those who want to establish summer resorts in the mountains is excellent. Applications are being filed in satisfactory numbers and the privilege will bring pleasure to a great many persons. The way to keep this privilege and to secure others is for the people to protect the government property they are on exactly as they would their own.

Pasadena has offered a prize of $10 as a premium on art in ash cans. This money is to be given to the person who can best combine beauty and utility in garbage receptacles. The idea is to be commended. We imagine that hundreds of persons stop to admire a bunch of flowers which most of the street cleaners in Los Angeles securely tie each morning to their scrapers. No work is so humble that it may not be elevated by beauty.

GOOD LITTLE POEMS.

Belgium.

Heartstruck she stands—Our Lady of all Sorrows—
Circled with ruin, sunk in deep amaze;
Facing the shadow of her dark tomorrows,
Mourning the glory of her yesterdays.

Yet is she queen, by every royal token,
There, where the storm of desolation swirled;
Crowned only with the thorn—despoiled and broken—
Her kingdom is the heart of all the world.

She made her breast a shield, her sword a splendor,
She rose like flame upon the darkened ways;
So, through the anguish of her proud surrender
Breaks the clear vision of undying praise.
—[Marion Couthouy Smith, in New York Sun.

Sunset in the Mountains.

When sunset's mellow light in splendor folds
The mountains in a shade of golden hue
A silent spell of rapture sweetly holds
The heart that to its homing hills is true.

Far into space brave thought in freedom flies,
To bear all burdens of the soul away,
And mystic beauty woos responsive eyes
Which watch the sun depart at close of day.
—[Charles H. Meiers, in Outdoor Life.

Romany Love Song.

Sprinkle dew from the sky
On the eyes of thy love,
Scatter light from on high
On the wings of the dove.

Dark is the town,
And dark are its men,
But white shining down
Are the stars of the glen.

Lay thy brown body
To brown earth's breast,
Dust unto dust cometh
Seeking its rest.
—[Edward J. O'Brien, in New York Sun.

The Ouzel's Song.

I hear a music in the air
As I pass down the little valley,
I hope to see the Naiad there,
And so beside the reeds I dally.
It is the water brawling, brawling.
It is the ouzel calling, calling.
Bird and stream
One singer seem,
Two notes as one are falling, falling.

Right merry is the woodland's voice,
Sweet is the piping of the Dryad,
The breezes in the reeds rejoice,
But sweetest is the laughing Naiad.
Hark to the wavelets singing, singing.
Hark to the ouzel ringing, ringing.
Silver chimes
And merry rhymes
Together they are bringing, bringing.

Oh, ripple, whisper in her ear,
"I love but you." Lo, from the river
An answer do I seem to hear,
"I love you ever, ever, ever."
Is it the streamlet sighing, sighing?
Is it the ouzel crying, crying?
Can the breeze
Amid the trees
Repeat, "For you I'm dying, dying?"

She laughs in every lapping wave,
She flings the foam flakes far above her,
She sleeps within a secret cave,
And dreams, I hope, of me, her lover.
Oh, watch the fountain welling, welling,
Oh, hear the ouzel telling, telling
To the wood
That love is good;
His is a music all excelling.
—[H. Fielding-Hall, in Saturday Review.

The Longing.

I want to go home to the old home I love—
To the dear grassy yard, and the long, winding lane,
To the pool, with its border of willows above,
And the hills that in springtime are misty with rain;
Oh, the soft mountain zephyrs are sweet, piny sweet,
And they ripple and billow the green seas of wheat.

There's a cool, shady orchard, where each wind that blows
Threads the dim, leafy silence with whisper and call,
And a rose hedge that scatters its dawn-painted snows
In a pink and white drift, by a mossy stone wall;
There are great, friendly cedars, that steadfastly wait,
And a pear tree in bloom by the old garden gate.

When the crimson light closes in night shadows long,
And a star beacon shines through the lace of a tree,
When the low winds are weaving the dream of a song,
Then a yearning thought wings o'er the darkness to me;
There's a whippoorwill's note in the shadowy gloam—
Oh, the Spring and the Southland are calling me home.
—[Essie Phelps Duffy, in Youth's Companion.

When Betty Strings the Beans.

I fain would sing a song
Of sweet domestic scenes,
My rhapsody to be:
When Betty Strings the Beans!

The string of harp or lute
No sweeter music makes,
Than do the tender greens
That Betty snips and breaks.

In fact I lose my head;
'Tis only true to tell,
When Betty strings the beans
She strings my "bean" as well.
—[McLandburgh Wilson, in New York Sun.

The Fairy's Invitation.

Dear child, I've brought a toadstool,
It's a table for our feast,
And a cowslip (such a bargain—Worth three daisies at the least!)

With five small cups upon it,
Full of sparkling, shining dew,
And of violets for perfume
We will scatter just a few.

We've pollen in a rose leaf;
Other dainties, more or less;
For it takes such choice refreshments
To make parties a success.

Please come at half past midnight;
I'll send Glowworm to attend.
Until supper time, believe me,
Your devoted Fairy Friend.
—[Lilian Macdonald, in Youth's Companion.

[Brooklyn Eagle:] The charming young suffragette, who expected to be married soon, went to the registration book for the first time.

The man in charge asked: "With what party do you expect to be affiliated?"

"That's none of your business," she replied. "If I have to tell his name I'm not going to register, so there."

[London Opinion:] Army Doctor: Have you had any experience in nursing?

Red Cross Recruit: Oh, yes, rather! I had three brothers who owned motorcycles.

[Princeton Tiger:] The Flirt: I wonder how many men will be made unhappy when I marry?

The Homely One: How many do you expect to marry?

HUMOR.

[Yonkers Statesman:] Mrs. Church: Didn't you have a house party yesterday at your home?

Mrs. Gotham: Yes; the landlord called for his rent.

[Penn State Froth:] Waiter: We have some nice chicken today, sir.

Brute: Yes, I see. You may bring me the one with the black hat.

[Yonkers Statesman:] Mrs. Yeast: Have you seen the non-refillable whisky bottle?

Mrs. Crimsonbeak: Yes, but what I'd rather see is a nonrefillable husband.

[Fliegende Blaetter:] He: You look to me older than you said you were.

She: You can't expect me to remember ages. Why, it's altering all the time.

[Houston Post:] "I wish," said the minister, "that you would drop into my church occasionally."

"I will," replied the saloonkeeper, "if you'll drop into my saloon occasionally."

[Munich Meggendorfer Blaetter:] "What! Just one shirt and one collar! Is that all?"

"The rest is still in the wash, doctor. I can't ever give you credit for more than one shirt at a time."

Oh, would some power the giftie gi'e us
To see each day
Our creditors before they see us,
And get away.
—[Kansas City Journal.

[Washington Star:] "Your constituents will gather at the station to meet you when you get home," said the visitor.

"I suppose so," replied Senator Sorghum, gloomily. "Will there be a reception committee or do they intend to assemble as a mob?"

[Richmond Times-Dispatch:] He: How do you justify yourself in breaking off our engagement, in view of all the endearing letters you have written me?

She: Oh, those letters were merely scraps of paper. Besides, they are opposed to the true spirit of neutrality the President urges and in which I have come to regard you.

[Cleveland Plain Dealer:] "Did you ever play cards for money?"

"Yes; but I never got it."

[Columbia Jester:] Bashful Student: What would you say if I were to throw a kiss at you?

Miss (blushingly:) I'd say you were the laziest fellow I've ever met.

[Washington Star:] "Have you laid the foundation for your presidential boom?"

"Yes. I have announced my unwillingness to be a candidate."

[Boston Record:] Daddy: No, yer mother never dressed the way you girls do today to catch a husband.

Daughter: Yes, but look at what she got.

[Buffalo Courier:] "But your fiance has such a small salary! How are you going to live?"

"Oh, we're going to economize. We're going to do without such a lot of things Jack needs."

[London Mail:] Corpulent Individual: But you can't give me any reason why I should not enlist.

Spouse: Well, I should miss you, dear, but the Germans couldn't.

[Fun:] "Harry," she said, thoughtfully.

"What is it?" responded the worried business man, rather shortly.

"I wish you could rearrange your business a little bit."

"How?"

"So as to be a bear on Wall street instead of at home."

[Judge:] Bilton: What is the reason for Jinks's sudden pseudo-pompous, dignified manner?

Tilton: He recently married, and he's trying to live up to his wife's opinion of him.

[Boston Transcript:] Patty: Jack has an awful hand grasp. When he proposed he squeezed my hand so hard it fairly ached.

Polly: Perhaps he meant it for an engagement ring.

[Life:] Master: Is that really so, Pat?

Man: To tell yez the truth, I'm lyin'.

[London Opinion:] He: When I was a boy I was once thrashed for telling the truth.

She: That cured you, I suppose.

[Puck:] "You little imp, I know you gave him some encouragement!"

"Yes; I told him faint heart never won fair lady, and sent him a box of strychnine pills!"

Man and His Dome Shield.

IF HENRY OF NAVARRE were to come in from the ostrich farm with a whole flock of flamboyant feathers in his helmet he would not create even a ripple of sensation on Broadway. People might stare at the convolutions and calisthenics of the traffic cop, but they wouldn't even give Hank the once-over.

The world has become used to seeing men wander around with all manner of sky pieces, so that about the only way a party can excite attention is to shave his head, paint it a brilliant scarlet and embroider his ears.

In an afternoon on Spring street one can see about all that has happened in masculine headgear since the world began. What the season's fashions fail to encourage the various fiesta parades will provide. The offerings range from the rain-proof dome shield of old man Noah to the coonskin cap of Davy Crockett—from the ventilated bird's nest of Henry Walker to the flaring beaver of Beau Brummel.

The latest agony in Panamas is rather lofty in crown. The last straw may not break the camel's back, but it surely shows which way the wind blows. If a man had brains enough to fill one of them level full he would have Dan Webster in the county house. We never expected to see plug hats made of straw, but they are here, and with them are gorgeous ribbon bands, and even the tip of a peacock's feather. Take a gangling youth and put one of these thatches on him; give him also one of those soft, rolling collars that run down the back of the coat, and then watch him roll a cigarette!

After that, you won't care much what happens, and even strong drink loses some of its terror.

The other afternoon a total of 529 men passed the Hotel Alexandria in fifteen minutes. In that number there were counted 523 different brands of brain pads. You would think that men were wearing individual pattern hats after the manner of the Parisian dames; yet if you go into a regulation furnishing shop the man will pull down a box containing perhaps a dozen hats—all alike. How is it? Do they sell only one from the box?

A couple of generations back the hatters produced about three different brands of lids in each vintage. So far as headgear is concerned, men looked pretty much alike. Now they are even more variant than the dames, and it actually takes a smart man to look like himself.

Probably we note more variety in Los Angeles than in most cities. There are residents or tourists from the four corners of the earth, and the turban of the Hindu or the fez of the Turk may be met in the same block with the bowler from Piccadilly. A popular uniform of the traveler is an overcoat and a straw hat, and it is not a bad outfit, either, in a country where people want to keep their hearts warm and their heads cool.

But practically anything and everything goes. Richard Coeur de Lion might parade Main street with a ponderous cast-iron pot on his dome, or Red Jacket in the war bonnet of his tribe without arousing a riot. The incurious spectator would merely suppose that a couple of larks were settling a bet or that the movie people were staging a historical romance.

In any event it is quite impossible for a mere man to josh his gentle partner on her lid. Some of the season's creations put out for the glad boys are quite as exotic and passionate as the wildest efforts of the milliner. Of course, there are comfortable, sensible and simple ideas in both straw and felt, but the rush is not for these. It is for the outre roof with the stovepipe crown and narrow rim, built of braided straw half an inch thick and caparisoned with gay ribbons.

Presently the men will be wearing jeweled hatpins to keep the blamed things on.

Glory be! however; a man may go bareheaded and still be welcomed in smart society.

"American" Good Enough.

OF ALL the nations on the face of the earth the one with the most inspiration to keep neutral is the United States. We are the most cosmopolitan people on earth, with the blood of all nations in our veins, and with a vast citizenship of foreign-born people. The times are very trying for these citizens of foreign birth, for Scott was right as to the man "who never to himself hath said, This is my own, my native, land." We are here, British, French, Teutons, Russians, and all sorts and conditions of people, all either native-born or adopted citizens of the United States, and while our hearts may bleed in sympathy with the terrible struggle going on in our native lands, our duty is first and all the time, if we are true men, to be Americans.

It is the time of all times to drop all hyphenated descriptive adjectives before the word American. Just the word itself is good enough for any man, and should be the one found in the mouth of any citizen who has sworn allegiance to the Constitution, the government and the flag. This is too obvious to need argument, for in swearing that allegiance every citizen foreswore all allegiance to all other governments, potentates and rulers.

We like the idea of the Irishman, an old-time Los Angeles man, James Hanley, who vigorously proposed that all foreign-born citizens should renew their allegiance to their adopted country by taking the oath anew. The oath of allegiance is very much akin to a religious sacrament, and some of the churches have the right of confirmation in which members renew their baptismal vows. Is anything more solemn or sacred than the allegiance we owe our own country? We think not. And we think the renewal of our vows on the part of citizens of foreign birth would be an excellent thing to see prevail.

Hermosa Beach has lost its chance for fame. Fishermen down there sighted a sea serpent last week, but the ungrateful reptile exploded itself into a large school of black porpoises which were swimming in a spiral line. Anyway, they gave a fancy parade, and our sunny little neighbor may catch its sea serpent on some future occasion.

What Pavlowa had to say about American ballroom dances in The Times last Sunday was no doubt read with interest throughout the country, and especially in Los Angeles. When it comes to the joy of the dance, as well as its variety, Los Angeles takes second place to no city in the world.

A small fire was started in one of the little motion-picture theaters on South Spring street last week, but the people kept calm and there was no panic. Los Angeles has been remarkably fortunate in this respect, considering the large number of theaters here.

You're on the ground—established—and because you're ahead you're apt to overestimate the advantages of priority, nativity, and familiarity with local traditions and prejudices, but beware, lest you play the hare.

You've been reared in a community so drunken with the madness of easy money that extravagance of energy and wealth, spendthrifty of time and thought are so common they have almost become a national failing.

You have fallen into a hundred little loose habits and have drifted into a score of wasteful hobbies.

His canny instincts will at once note your vulnerability and suggest the line of attack to which you will eventually succumb.

By making his day's produce twice as much as you glean from yours in a short while he will overcome his handicap of tardiness and compete with you, shoulder to shoulder, before you realize he is at hand.

While you're studying the latest dance steps he'll be studying the latest text-books—while you're motoring he'll be maneuvering, scheming, and dreaming, sharpening his wits upon humble whetstones which you deem below your dignity.

He is the representative American of the future — PREPARE FOR HIM OR IN THE END YOU'LL WORK FOR HIM.

Remember that he can get along without most of the things that you are habituated to believe are essential to your existence.

At home he was not permitted to confuse necessities with luxuries.

He has no false pride—he belongs to a people who can't afford to tolerate such nonsense—to a social order in which common folks do not ape the excess and imitate the diversions of hereditary classes.

He won't be ashamed to let service instead of style wear out his colthes; he won't pay a premium for the flashy distinction of living in a showy neighborhood. He's an investor by heredity; his first insistent idea will be the accumulation of capital. He'll save his money and won't save himself; he'll start at the bottom, but he'll fix his eyes on the top and he'll edge up a little bit every year.

He'll be indurated with the confidence that anybody can get rich in the United States and he'll go about acquiring his fortune the way that Europe has taught him.

He'll take orders cheerfully and despise no task with a dollar hidden in it—that was drilled into him over there.

You're trailing the man ahead of you, so you won't notice him creeping up from the rear.

And when you do meet, his bad English will throw you off your guard and fill you with a sense of false superiority—but don't hold him in contempt—he'll be thinking mighty good American, as you'll discover when you meet to match wits.

There are but few of us who have lived up to the opportunities adventured by our pioneer forbears.

The signs along the business streets are strange with names alien to the early history of the republic. But in more than one sense they are sign of the times. Yesterday Europe mainly gave us those whom she did not need—her unwrought and untaught surplus—but tomorrow "a new order cometh."

[Copyright, 1915, by Herbert Kaufman.]

In the face of the crisis which the torpedoing of the Lusitania precipitated upon the United States, no section of the country kept a better hold upon itself than Southern California. We have people here from everywhere, but no undue bitterness was expressed in any quarter. Our people waited in confidence upon the voice of the President and stood ready to support him in whatever emergency his demands might bring.

A Los Angeles girl was allowed to assist in picking a jury. If the intuition of women is to be brought to bear in the selection of trial jurors, a good many different elements will be brought into play with varying results. On the whole the process should be satisfactory, if the girls are not too much inclined to exhaust the number of their challenges all in a bunch.

[Chicago Herald:] "I cured my wife of quarreling about wanting her own way in everything."

"How?"

"I let her have it."

[Milwaukee Sentinel:] "Every man should be ambidextrous," observed the sage.

"You mean that every man should make his left hand his write hand, I suppose?" said the fool.

[Yonkers Statesman:] Mrs. Myles: You know she keeps an army of servants.

Mrs. Styles: Don't exaggerate so. I guess not an army of servants."

"Well, they fight like an army, all right!"

[Philadelphia Ledger:] "I'll have to arrest you," said the policeman.

The man who was having trouble with his wife threw both arms around the officer and exclaimed:

"This isn't any arrest. This is a rescue."

On the Up Grade.

slowly swung the big machine around and stopped on the park side.

"What I'd like to do," said the old man, buttoning his heavy top coat, "would be to meet you both here under this pepper tree—say six months from now—to see how my theory works. That is, if you care to—" He was suddenly shy and embarrassed again.

Blake responded promptly. Brandon was more or less reluctant.

The old man smiled confidently. "Very well—we'll make it at twelve-thirty. You'll both be working and that will be your lunch hour. Twelve-thirty," he made a rapid calculation, "on June first. I'll be here waiting. Here under the pepper tree. Good-by and good luck to you both, in the meantime!" He turned and walked stiffly down the graveled path toward the purple car.

Brandon and Blake stood looking after him.

"A queer old chap," said Brandon.

"Good as gold," supplemented Blake enthusiastically, "and his preaching is good." He set his foot across the despised editorial lying at his feet. "Better than that rot, any day!"

"It must be," said Brandon, losing his nerve again. "When I come to really consider what I promised him I think I am a fool!"

"You are if you don't stick to your promise!"

"I expect to! But it's going to take more nerve than you think!"

. . . . .

June first came clear and sunny. The park was filled, as usual, with idle loungers sunning on the benches.

Under the pepper tree, Blake, ahead of time, waited impatiently. In the rough-clad figure hurrying toward him he found it hard to recognize the wilted dandy of six months before.

"What have you been doing to yourself?" he demanded admiringly. "You're hard as nails, and you've got a grip like a vise!" He rubbed his tingling fingers.

"I've been doing everything, from trucking up," replied Brandon enthusiastically. "The governor is beside himself with joy, and brags me up constantly. It's a fine old man I've got—darned fine—though I never knew it before. I wouldn't throw him down now for anything in the world. And you?"

"Well," Blake replied, "I'm satisfied. There are to be some changes in the firm, and I believe I shall be taken care of. I tell you, both you and I owe that funny old codger a great deal. What he said was straight truth, but he surely has a strong personality to hammer it home the way he does. I've had a lot of advice fired at me, but none of it seemed to stick the way his did!"

"I've told dad about it," said Brandon, "and he wants to meet him—says he wants to shake his hand and thank him."

The big purple car sped down the street and swung to at the curb.

"There he comes now!"

The chauffeur sprang down from the front seat, and entering the park, hurried toward them.

"I guess you are the fellows I'm looking for—" He hesitated doubtfully.

"We're to meet the old man here at twelve-thirty today," Brandon replied.

The chauffeur fumbled in his pocket and drew forth a sealed envelope. He handed it to Brandon. "He gave me this and told me to be sure to deliver it here to you on June first at twelve-thirty, sharp—the day before he died."

Brandon and Blake looked at him in shocked amazement.

"The day before he died!" Blake repeated it blankly.

"When—when did—that happen?" Brandon's tone was colorless.

"Over four months ago," replied the chauffeur; "his heart was bad, you know."

Brandon and Blake looked at each other dumfounded. "And he remembered—he didn't forget—" Brandon stared down at the envelope in his hand, through misty eyes.

"No—he didn't forget—" Blake was unashamed of the sudden moisture in his own. "I'd give anything I have just to tell him what I think of him!"

Brandon slowly opened the envelope. Inside was an editorial, clipped from the daily paper—an editorial headed, "ON THE UP GRADE," and across the face of it was written in a round, full hand, the name of the great editorial writer.

Blake and Brandon stared at each other with dawning comprehension.

BROOK AND BROOKLETS.

[From "Brain and Brawn," edited by Harry Ellington Brook, N.D., and published in the Chamber of Commerce building, Los Angeles.]

Happiness and Health.

If you feel happy and efficient when you rise, you may know that you are in good health.

The Disagreeable Dyspeptic.

It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a chronic dyspeptic to be amiable.

Wealth and Pardon.

Society is not so heartless as some would make us believe. Society readily forgives the crook who becomes wealthy.

Immigration Qualifications.

What we should have is not a test of education of the head, but a test of soundness of heart and body, in those who seek to become citizens of this republic.

The Dreadful Drug Habit.

Some drugs wreck only the body. Others ruin soul and body alike. Men and women who have become addicted to the regular use of one of these habit-forming drugs will stop at nothing—not even at murder—in order to obtain what they crave.

When Wars Will End.

Wars will not cease so long as men and women are willing to believe it a holy duty for them to shoot, kill, maim and destroy good neighbors who live across an imaginary boundary line. War will not cease until men and women realize the brotherhood of man, regardless of race, color, flag or speech.

Muffler Should be Used.

In several American cities societies have been formed for the prevention of unnecessary noises. It is a good idea, and should be encouraged. It is remarkable how many of our city noises are avoidable. They tend to increase nervousness, and to mar the enjoyment of life, by those whose sensibilities have not been blunted.

Doctors and Drugs.

A large number of physicians are themselves addicted to the use of morphine. This is no wonder, considering the strenuous life they lead, and the fact that they are continually handling the drug. Conscientious physicians have for some time past refused to administer it, but then, what was the use, while there were so many others willing to do so?

Ancient Surgery.

A set of thirty-seven very remarkable ancient Greek surgical instruments has been discovered near the site of Colophon, in Ionia, and are at present in England. The instruments show a type of workmanship unequaled in any other extant specimens, and generally reveal the very great progress in surgery that the ancients achieved. The date, although somewhat uncertain, is probably the first or second century, A.D. It is possible, however, that it may have been before the Christian era, says a writer in the London Times.

With two exceptions, the instruments are all of bronze. The blades of the knives were originally steel, but in each case this metal has been almost completely destroyed by rust. Among other instruments discovered were forceps for removing growths, and arrow and lance heads from wounds; a contrivance for raising the depressed bones of the skull, and a remarkable instrument called a "drill bow," for performing a skull trephine.

The collection includes a tenaculum, or sharp hook, similar to those in modern use; a number of catheters of beautiful workmanship, shaped like modern instruments of the same type; a cautery for burning wounds; a couple of probes exactly like the modern ones; a couple of spatulas, or spoons; a needle holder, and a bronze box, evidently an instrument case. In addition, there are a slab of Egyptian porphyry, upon which ointments were mixed, and a pair of scales, still in excellent equipoise.

Some cupping vessels were also discovered. The method of using these was to ignite a piece of dry linen placed inside of them, and then to apply them to the skin. As the heated air cooled within, it contracted, and sucked the skin into the neck of the cup, then exercising counter-irritation. The modern Biers glass exhibits the same principle.

Spelling of Names.

[Pittsburgh Dispatch:] "Many people are particular about the spelling of their names," says Prof. Ernest Weekley of University College, Nottingham, in his new book, "The Romance of Names," adding that he is so himself, though as a student of philology he ought to know better. This recalls the episode in Pickwick where Sam Weller appears as a witness.

"Do you spell it with a V or a W?" inquired the judge.

"That depends upon the taste and fancy of the speller, my lord," replied Sam. "I never had occasion to spell it more than once or twice in my life, but I spells it with a V."

It may be recalled by some of the older printers of Indianapolis that an ingenious compositor, long "holding cases" on the Journal, succeeded into getting into the company of authors by publishing a little volume showing the multiplicity of ways in which the word Shakespeare might be spelt and misspelt.

Prof. Weekley says that this greatest of Englishmen was so careless in his orthography as to sign himself Shagspear, a fact usually emphasized by Baconians when speaking of "the illiterate clown of Stratford-on-Avon." The professor avers that the modern spelling of any particular name is a pure accident; that a considerable proportion of English people until recently did not spell their names at all, leaving it, as did Mr. Samuel Weller, to the taste and fancy of the speller; that they trusted to the parson and the clerk, who did their best with unfamiliar names; that even now old people in the rural districts of England may find half a dozen orthographic variants of their own names among the spare documentary records of their humble lives.

And this is as true of America as it is of England. The writer at one time in Indianapolis knew three brothers, Germans, each of whom spelled his family name differently. He also knew of a Tomlinson who spelt the family name, signifying the son of Tom-o'-the-linn, Tumbleson, aided thereto doubtless by his unlettered neighbors in a backwoods community in southern Indiana.

"The spelling of the language," says the professor, "is now practically normalized, although in conformity with no sort of principle; but the family name as a private possession has kept its freedom. Thus, if we wish to speak poetically of a meadow, I suppose we should call it a lea, but the same word is represented by the family names Lea, Lee, Ley, Leigh, Legh, Legge, Lay and Lye."

The Meddler.

she said. "I'm making her a little dress and this is to trim it with. They've up an' named her for me! Of all things, what a name to inflict upon an innocent child! Letitia Tarbox Wickwire! Well, I must be going. I've promised little Della Shively I'll go over an' show her how to make bread early tomorrow mornin'. And pie crust! That pie she brought to the Ladies' Aid Social the other night was—well, I just slipped it out of sight so the other women wouldn't try to cut into it. No use for 'em to know what's the reason of Elmer Shively's poor health! I've taken Della in hand and I'll make a splendid little cook of her, see if I don't! She's the gratefulest little thing you ever saw. Now, you'll have to own up I am a meddler, won't you, Mary Ellen?"

She laughed, and I laughed with her. "Yes, you're what I call a meddler—a heavenly meddler," I said. "Come over again right soon, won't you?"

Letty Tarbox, her little pink fascinator over her head, went down the steps while I held the lamp for her.

She gave that little laugh of hers. "You bet I will!" she called back.

O H, THE babes of Bethlehem, slaughtered at the command of a mean, nasty, cowardly, superstitious tyrant! And the daughters of Rachel weeping for their little ones and no comfort for them on the face of the earth nor in the skies, bereft as they were of their nurslings, no longer in their arms nor within the reach of their eyes, and if these bereaved mothers should live a century they would never see these little ones again.

These innocents slaughtered at the behest of a tyrant are commemorated every year by every historical branch of the Christian church. It has been two millennia since this event took place, and in all those years the name of Herod has been synonymous with everything that is bestial, mean, cowardly and cruel. Yes, and if Christian civilization were to continue a myriad of years "to out-Herod Herod" would be on the lips and in the minds of men to be a monster so diabolical, cruel and despicable that no human words could express his badness.

King Herod had never had a syllable of knowledge of Messianic mercy and love. We have had the influence of the Messiah's teaching working upon us through all the generations since Herod went to his horrible death, and how much better are we than he?

Who shall commemorate the martyred babies who suffered death in the cold salt sea off the coast of Ireland when a torpedo blew the great trans-Atlantic passenger steamer to pieces and she went to the bottom with so much of her human freight? On that ship were 200 babies, and not one of them survived the destruction of the vessel on which they were traveling. There is a story of a woman with three of them, all dead by her side, whom it was necessary to put back into the sea to make room for living persons in the boat. It is one of the most tragically pathetic incidents in the history of the times. "Give them to me. They were mine to raise, and now they are mine to bury." And with these sad words she pushed them back into the treacherous sea which had cost their lives, and so she went on her way uncomforted and not to be comforted again this side of that land which seems so far off. The woman was Scotch, and if there is any place for other humans in the "land o' the leal" there is a place for her where she will find again her wee bairnies.

O humans, what horrible hatred must animate your breasts in these last, best days of your race upon the earth! These are not the only innocents slaughtered in a bloody sacrifice to the horrible god of war in the strife that is laying waste half the world. These are only 200 little innocents who went to their fate on the Lusitania. In Belgium a million babies have for nearly a year been suffering from hunger, nakedness, cold and without shelter of a roof to cover them. What a heartless scheme it is of your war policies to starve to death every noncombatant in the great German Empire, including all the millions of babies in all the Teuton realms of Central Europe.

The Eagle, friends, cannot understand war from the standpoint of you superior beings claiming headship over all creation and arrogating to yourselves the rule of all inferior creatures. In the Eagle tribe there is more sense of justice in a minute than in the human tribes in a generation. There is more mercy among the brute creation than among the humans with all their heart and soul, of which you boast so proudly. The Eagle has heard of dogs taking orphan kittens, the offspring of the cat race, the traditional antipathy of dogs and raising them when bereft of their mothers. Birds of the air have taken the nestlings of other birds and fed them and brought them up.

Is there no mercy left in human hearts? Do you not know what Shakespeare says of this grandest of human virtues?

"The quality of mercy is not strained.
It droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed—
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest and becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown."

Human wars are the most horrible things that have ever afflicted the earth which the All-Father made as the home for His creatures, where He intended them all to live in peace and quietness. The passions of the human heart are the fiercest things in all God's creation. When these passions are awake, reason flees, and the human ear becomes deaf to all pleas for pity and to all appeals to the right mind of the race. You have been preparing wars for yourselves through all your history and your Eagle is very fearful that you are now preparing a series of bloody conflicts that will run into the next generation, and from that into another, and on, on, no eye can see how far. Racial hatred and national resentments are being multiplied at a rate never known before in human history. In highly-civilized England we are reading of riots breaking out in many towns against every person of German blood or German descent. Law and order are at a discount, and lawlessness is at a premium. Of course they are the "baser sort" who commit these depredations on their neighbors, and no doubt sordid greed to possess the goods of their neighbors lies as deep or deeper than national antipathy.

But what are these individuals doing as unorganized mobs worse than the nations are doing organized and under government direction and control? Your Eagle, friends, cannot see any difference between acts committed by individuals in contempt and in opposition to national laws and similar acts committed by nations one against another under government control and by governmentment direction in violation of international laws. If you can justify the blowing up of the Lusitania you can easily justify the riots against German shops and homes all over England. To the Eagle's mind one is just as incomprehensible and just as unjustifiable as the other.

O friends, you learn so slowly! In all Great Britain, the people of which division are most loyal to their government and fighting the hardest on the battlefields of France and Belgium? Do you not comprehend what a change has taken place in the sentiment of the Irish people toward the English government in the present generation? Why, a hundred years ago half the male population of Ireland would have been over in Belgium under the German eagles fighting their English neighbors. When Limerick, "the city of sieges," was taken by the soldiers of King William and the Irish soldiers marched out of its gates, there were set up two standards, one of Great Britain and other of France, and every argument was used to induce the defeated Irish to join the English army, but to a man they enrolled themselves under the standard of France.

Why is this change of sentiment? Because the English government has learned to treat its Irish subjects more justly. If there is any doubt about the injustice done the Irish by the English in the past, the Eagle refers you to a book on the subject written by Samuel Smiles, an English scholar and author, surely not prejudiced in favor of the Irish. What has been done in Ireland may be done in all the world, internationally as well as nationally, when human beings will simply learn to recognize the rights of others, to stop the game of grab and to curb greed leading to unjust treatment of one people against another. When you shall have learned to "love mercy and do justly" you will have no more wars among you.

If you could take your stand on the hill of Calvary and look over the earth and into the sky

"When you have told those isles of light,
  And fancied all beyond,
Whatever owns in depth or height
  Creation's wondrous bond,
Then from their solemn pageant learn
  Sweet mercy's praise to see.
Their Lord resigned them all to earn
  The bliss of pardoning thee."

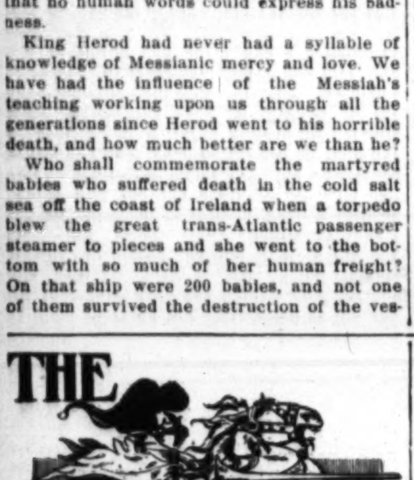
HIS MARK



THE LANCER

S OMEBODY said I was taking life too seriously and recommended me taking a little dose of frivolity for a week or so. They insinuated that I was getting stodgy and needed cheering up.

And their cure included the Orpheum, the Rodeo, Charlie Chaplin and a round of golf. To say nothing of two parades and a musical evening.

Ye gods! And they call that pleasure. On each of those occasions I witnessed an exuberance of enthusiasm, vast crowds and wild applause, except on the golf links where one curses rhythmically instead.

The youthfulness of this country was never so apparent. At the Orpheum the star numbers, applauded by crowded houses, were two mangy-looking Italians with a combination piano-concertina, who sang a lugubrious song to the effect that "I never raised my boy to be a soldier." Its moral was unimpeachable, and as a sermon at a Methodist church would have been entirely in place. Dr. David Starr Jordan puts the case more logically in his intensely respectable editorials, which nobody reads, so possibly this is a more satisfactory way of getting the sentiments to the public.

The other star item was a playlet called "The Quaker," in which a very silly young woman and a very improper vaudeville manager give a very sordid insight into things as they are not, the young woman singing what she was pleased to call a song about a little dog, and not forgetting an insidious lifting of the skirt at stated intervals, nicely calculated to make a suffragette writhe.

Rodeo Ideals.

T HE Rodeo sounded more wholesome, and I looked to the equines to take the taste out of my mouth.

The horses were all right, but their riders, male and female, showed such a deplorable taste for cerise and emerald-green satin, gold lace and tawdry trimmings, that it must have made the horses blush for shame. What should have been a fine masculine cowboy appeared in a grimy magenta satin shirt; and the breezy, courageous, dashing cowgirls evinced a most pathetic streak of gilded femininity, business-like enough below the waist—leather skirts and leggings—but third row of the chorus after it had slept in its finery for a week, above the waist.

And those appalling hats? Why? Great ugly, heavy, hopelessly unbecoming and vilely dirty affairs that would successfully hide the beauty of Helen of Troy.

One was fain to observe that the most brilliant female rider was the one who had discarded this form of headgear for a green jockey cap, and the most dashing male was the sole exponent of the possibilities of civilized clothing—so much so that he was suspected of being a moving-picture cowboy.

Charlie Chaplin.

T HEN they assured me that I must positively see Charlie Chaplin, the great scream, the funniest thing that ever happened, made you laugh for a week afterward.

Oh, law! And the worst of it is, he really is the quintessential essence of national humor. He bumps into everything and everybody, all his jokes are physical calamities for somebody—violent impact with something or other, never the right way up for more than half a minute at a time.

In one of the half-minute intervals he created roars of laughter by scratching another man's head and then looking dubiously at his fingers. And one can win fame, yes, and national affection, by such cheap methods!

One does not blame Charlie. He would be a fool not to trade on that evident taste for violent calamity—the good old American joke that calls for stars and acrobatic bumps in the last picture.

But it made me so deadly mournful that my friends rushed me off to the golf links before I had time to pine away.

Golf.

B UT here, there was real humor. The American has taken to golf with appalling and acrid avidity. He drives off from the first tee with a look of fierce melancholia. He obviously views it as a ghastly deed that must be done at all costs. Like rushing the wire entanglements in the trenches. And he proceeds to swear softly and viciously after each shot, when he doesn't pause to make extensive explanations. Out of about 5000 golfers in Southern California, there are perhaps a dozen who can play the game. The rest strive persistently and blasphemously for the most part, or, if their disposition doesn't run to swear words, they tearfully explain and explain and explain after every shot just why they are not playing as we'll as they know they can, as, of course, they invariably do when nobody's there to see.

The average golfer invariably arrives at the last green in a very bad temper, explanatory and morose and it takes at least a couple of hours to get him right again. After which he will bore his friends sick with eulogies of the great game of golf, which is so good for the nerves, the mental training, the good sportsmanship of the player. Amen.

The average golfer is a far more humorous person than Charlie Chaplin if the public only had time to study him. To see him muttering a choice selection of swear words to himself as he vainly tries to lift that small ball out of a ditch with a wholly inadequate weapon, is a real scream. To see him striking tortuous attitudes in order to acquire what he is pleased to call his "swing," to see him voluntarily perspiring and fretful because that elusive ball fails to respond to treatment, to see him smash a $5 driver across his knee when, after a mighty swipe, his ball dribbles three feet in front of the tee, is far more deliciously humorous than anything Charlie Chaplin has to offer at present. I am of opinion that if Charlie would give us a golf picture, faithfully mimicking the average golfer on an average day's round, he would make the hit of the year. There isn't any other game that engenders quite so much serious and deadly absurdity.

Movies for the Schools.

O NE of the bills just passed by our California Legislature is an appropriation providing moving pictures for school children. Not, one imagines, to train the poor little wretches for the moving-picture profession, but to present pictures suitable for their consumption.

The taxpayer should modify his moan. For this really is a crying need. Suburban picture shows must necessarily cater chiefly for the grown-ups who have shown such an avidity for this form of entertainment, and it is no unusual thing for the unwary parent and guardian to send his children to a picture show where the entertainment is of a very advanced order. For instance, one such place in a residential district was giving "A Fool There Was" last week, and the house was full of children, drinking in all the horrors and realism of that garish production, the while, doubtless, parents were blissfully under the impression the children were enjoying an evening of rollicking amusement. While, possibly, most children must know this sort of thing sooner or later, one feels that the later the better, and there were 6 and 7-year-old children in that audience.

The Grocery Bill.

A NOTHER little enactment which our Legislature was responsible for is to make the wife's separate property liable for the grocery bill. One had not quite realized that up till now madam could spend her private income as she jolly well pleased and leave hubby to meet all the liabilities as best he could, no matter what the contingency.

Still, one must admit that it was a very small proportion of the women who acted upon this political right. In a general way, the wives can be relied upon to come through handsomely enough in a crisis if they have the wherewithal.

It all comes back to the old question of marriage for love or marriage for patrimony. The woman who declares she does not love her husband, but respects him, usually respects him for his ability to pay the grocery bills.

"Home, Sweet Home" - For Wife and Mother. For Daughter and Maid.

OLD WINDOW DRAPERIES.

To Lengthen and Renew.

[New York Press:] Curtains of scrim, net or any plain material, if badly shrunken can be lengthened by placing across the bottom a band of insertion and lace matching the color of the curtain.

Lace curtains with a pattern at the bottom are more difficult to manage. If there is an over-drapery the net can be joined with a narrow band of insertion near the top and will not be seen. Scrim curtains that have outlived their usefulness as draperies can be converted into bureau and pincushion covers, the part that is not worn being utilized with a lace edge to finish it off.

For the Bedroom.

One pretty set I saw at a friend's house had a band one and one-half inches wide of pale yellow sateen all around the edge and just inside of that was a narrow lace insertion. The oblong pincushion cover was treated in the same way, and both had a yellow sateen cover underneath. The same idea could be carried out in any shade, for a good sateen launders well.

THE USEFUL POTATO.

[Moravia (N. Y.) Republican:] To clean a vinegar cruet fill the cruet with finely-chopped potato skin, cork tightly and let it stand in a warm place three days; then turn the skins out and rinse the cruet with warm water and borax.

To clean rusty knives use a raw potato dipped in brick dust.

Potato parings dried in the oven are good to kindle fires, as they light easily.

To clean carpets grate a raw potato and rub over the surface of the carpet and finish off with a clean cloth wrung out in warm water.

To clean dresses grate two raw potatoes into a pint of cold water, strain through a sieve, add another pint of water and let it settle. Dip a sponge into the water and rub the soiled garment carefully, afterward rinsing with clear water.

To clarify drippings slice a raw potato into the fat while rendering. It will absorb all impurities.

To make light bread mash a boiled potato and add to the flour.

For corned-beef hash chop a raw potato and add to the meat.

To clean mud spots from silk, after washing thoroughly rub soiled places with a raw potato.

When a fern turns yellow slice a raw potato and put it on top of the soil. This will draw out the worms.

IN THE LAUNDRY.

Blanket Washing.

[New York Sun:] Blankets should be washed upon a dry windy day. March is considered the best month for blankets, but they may be washed any time, if a windy day. Never wet more than one blanket at a time, whether small or large, neither should one be allowed to wait out of the water for another; it must be in readiness.

Well shake all woolens before placing in the first water. This removes a deal of dust, and so the water is kept cleaner. If soiled new blankets are going to be washed double the quantity of soap jelly will be required than for an old one; the grease in the blankets hardens the water; then is the time they shrink. Of course there must be plenty of soap jelly in the first water and a clear one after. Unless the blankets are much soiled, two good hot waters will be enough, but enough water must be in the pan to completely cover the blankets. A little blue may be added to the rinsing water. When well wrung out take the blanket at each end (two people) and shake well, selvedge way, and hang selvedge way upon the line. Do not pull the blanket too much or a scallop will be found top and bottom of the blanket.

Move While Drying.

Blankets should be often moved when upon the line. When partly dry take them off, shake them and then put them back on the other side. They will be found equally dried, the same color, without the streaky lines so often seen in blankets washed at home.

Many laundry women "teazle" the blankets; they look better, but soon wear out, and for this reason, if for no other, it is a good thing when possible to wash them at home.

KINKS IN THE KITCHEN.

Soak Utensils Immediately.

[Chicago Tribune:] Fill utensil three parts full of boiling water, putting in with this a small lump of soda, then when the dinner has been served all that is necessary is to empty them out, rinse them well to remove any scraps of food there may be left on them, dry them well and hang them up where the air can get at them. Next morning, when the pots are cleaned, have ready some hot water to which soda has been added, in a large bath, dip the pans into this, then rub each pan well inside and out with a cloth previously soaped and dipped into fine cleanser; next rinse thoroughly in clean water, wipe the pan dry and put it back in its place. If necessary, it must be scoured again in the same way if stained.

When Pan Has Burned.

Should the pan have been allowed to burn and there are still some burnt fragments clinging to it fill the pan full of boiling soda and water and let it all boil for a little when it should be cleaned as before. The lid must be cleaned in the same way, for often this is neglected, with the result that the food cooked next time in the pan is apt to have a disagreeable flavor for which apparently it is impossible to account.

LITTLE FASHION NOTES.

Collar that Lends Height.

[Washington Star:] Black satin ribbon ties give a false appearance of height to a certain type of collar which is good in either white satin or pique. The foundation, encircling the neck evenly, is divided from the top downward by the black ribbon, which across the back is covered by a wide flap and flares outward. Under the ears it tapers into tabs, which lie flat against the tie. At times the necktie is omitted, and wisely so, too, if the face is a bit too plump.

Neckwear for Full Chin.

A collar of stiffened net, whose turn-over of net lace joins beneath the chin under a spray of tiniest flowers and then spreads itself into triangular ends, is very distinctive. It looks tall all round, but in reality it is enough depressed in front to be becoming to a full chin.

To Suit the Thin Woman.

At last something to suit the thin woman has been designed. Her first choice is the black satin crush stock, upbuilt with white. It surmounts a chemisette, and the two fasten invisibly, thereby differing from rival models, closing—or pretending to close—with tiniest buttons.

CARE OF BABY.

Slow Teething and Rickets.

[Today's Magazine:] Difficult or slow teething is sometimes due to rickets, which is a disease in which the bones do not harden as they should. This can be guarded against by giving daily, after the first few months of life (say three or four) grape juice and orange juice in small amounts, a teaspoonful of either, at first, well diluted, increasing the quantity gradually, until by the time the child is a year old it is taking a tablespoonful of grape juice, or the juice of half an orange. Apple or prune juice may be added to the list after the child is six months old. The mineral substances in these juices aid in hardening the bones and teeth. Beef juice in small quantities is very beneficial in cases of slow teething.

Do Not Wean While Teething.

Do not wean the baby during a period of teething. If a nursing baby refuses the breast, give it plain boiled, unsweetened water, or barley water instead, for twenty-four hours, and do the same if it has vomiting or diarrhoea.

WEE ONES' MENU.

Isinglass Nutritious.

[Indianapolis News:] A pudding much appreciated by children is made by lining a basin or mold with slices (which may be of all shapes and sizes) of dry bread slightly buttered, the basin also being greased, and filling in the center with sweetened milk and the juice from stewed fruit (two parts of the former to one of the latter) in which the proper amount of isinglass to "set" it has been dissolved. Steam the pudding for ten minutes or so and let it get quite cold before turning out. Isinglass of a really reliable make is really a valuable nutrient and jellies or "shapes" of any kind made with it are well recommended for children.

Plum Blanc Mange.

Another admirable pudding on the same lines is made by filling the mold (either previously lined with bread or not) with well stewed plums which have been pressed in a pulp through a coarse sieve, beaten up with the requisite amount of isinglass dissolved in warm juice, or a change may be rung by mixing corn flour made as for an ordinary blanc mange, and fruit pulp in equal quantities, and serving with a sauce of the fruit juice poured over it.

FOR OUT-OF-DOORS.

A Home-made Awning.

[Christian Science Monitor:] Following is the mode of making an adaptable and comfortable awning: Buy four bamboo or cane poles about five feet long and fasten a brass hook into the top of each one. Now take four yards of material, one yard wide, either heavy unbleached muslin or dark green denim (either is soft and pliable.) Cut goods into two-yard lengths and sew the strips together, making a four-yard square. Hem all four edges and at each corner sew a good-sized brass eye to fasten over the hooks in the poles. Now drive your poles one foot into the earth or sand—wherever you have elected to pitch your habitation, about two yards apart in a square, and when you have adjusted your top to it you will have a four-yard area of shade open to the cooling breezes in which four people can sit comfortably. The chief joy of this awning is the fact that it can be easily carried, and as readily removed from place to place without inconvenience.

Burlap Covers for Porch Pillows.

Natural colored burlap makes serviceable covers for porch pillows. To decorate, cut inch-wide strips of bright silk (possibly from discarded neckties or hair ribbons which have been washed,) thread in a tape needle and darn in half-inch stitches through the loosely-woven burlap a bold design of interlaced squares or triangles or a swastika. A half-dozen covers can be made in an afternoon, and they are very effective when piled in a porch settee or Gloucester hammock on the piazza of the summer bungalow.

LITTLE HOME CONTRIVANCES.

The Cheese-Box Tray.

[Farm and Fireside:] A cheese box with a part of a barrel hoop for a handle makes a very convenient tray for carrying several dishes of food—to or from the cellar, from kitchen to dining-room. One can use it also for bringing vegetables from the cellar or in from the garden. A coat of enamel paint makes the tray easy to keep clean and fresh-looking.

The Boy's Blacking Box.

Get your boy a small wooden box, fix a cover on it with hinges, and put into the box two boxes of good shoe polish, one black and one brown, a couple of shoe brushes, two squares of flannel for the first rub and a soft cushion of old velvet, about four by six inches, to give the final polish. Almost any boy will appreciate this personal gift, and there can be no further excuse for mislaid polish or brushes.

HEARTSEASE.

Getting Sick to Be Healed.

[Puck:] Man was experiencing his first ache. "It warns me," he reasoned, "that I have violated a law of my nature, and puts me on my guard against doing so again."

But just here he happened to discover some anodyne herb which put an end to the ache.

"Ha! I needn't trouble, after all—I can go on and do as I please!" he exclaimed, highly thanking his lucky stars.

And from such beginnings rose the great art of healing.

To a Bird.

Would I could fly with thee, little bird, to the heart of the morning,
Out of the green, still tree into the springing sun.
Long, too long, in the shadows my heart
hath been sojourning,
I am a-weary now of a dark that is never done,
I am a-weary of sitting on the fruitless
Bough of Desire
While all about me the world blossoms and blooms and sings.
Would I could fly with thee, little bird, to the heart of the fire,
Would that some strange enchantment
gave me thy wings.

Would I could rest with thee, little bird, in the leafy gloaming,
Deep in the green, still tree when the long day's flight is done,
Would that I found such rest as thine is after the roaming,
Would thy content enwrapt me when I came out of the sun.
I am a-weary of tossing in the burning Lap of Desire
While all about me the world sleeps when its labors cease,
Would I could find thy nest when I came out of the fire,
Would that some strange enchantment
gave me thy peace.

California, Land of the Sun, by the Western Sea.

Empire Tulare.

A MILLION and a half acres of as fertile soil as there is on the face of the earth, under the most salubrious and beneficial climate under the sun, and with a population of a little more than 35,000 human souls—such is Tulare county in the center of the great San Joaquin Valley, which lies in the center of the great State of California. In the county are 40,000 acres of citrus-fruit trees, orange orchards richer and more profitable than those of Valencia, Spain, lemon groves more luxuriant and productive than those of Sicily, raisin grapes as fine as ever flourished in Malaga, plum trees equaling those of France, apple trees as fine as anything in old England, interspersed with all the cereals of the northern hemisphere and alfalfa meadows rich as the clover fields of Ireland—surely a great future lies before this great subdivision of the great State of California.

The farm property in this county in the year 1900 was worth $20,287,801. Ten years later, when the next census was taken, this valuation had grown to $76,539,642. At the present time the valuation is probably about $100,000,000. Of the more than 40,000 acres of citrus-fruit trees in the county, only about 10,000 acres are in bearing. As the citrus-fruit orchards are the most valuable of all farm property, it will be seen that the value of the farms must increase very rapidly as these orchards come into bearing. But it is population that gives value to real estate, farming and municipal, and the county of Tulare, if it had a million population in it, would not be crowded. There are immense tracts of land in the county that need subdivision and that are being subdivided very rapidly. When the population is three times what it is now there will be plenty of elbow room and plenty of cubic air space for all there, and so it will be when there are a quarter of a million and a half million.

To the rich crops enumerated above might be added many acres of olive orchards as rich as those of Italy, and to the vineyards wide expanses of wine-grape vines as productive as anything known in France.

Progress in Metallurgy.

SOME few months ago there was a little item on this page of the Illustrated Weekly mentioning a project to establish an antimony refinery at Harbor Industrial City. The concern behind this is known as the Western Metals Company, and on May 15 smelting was started there with fifty men at work. This plant is one of the few of its kind in the United States, and the only one in Southern California. The plant, which consists of a single entire unit, cost about $75,000. Its capacity is 1500 tons of refined antimony a month. That the project will be successful there is no room to doubt, and as a market is created for the product other units will be added.

Imperial County Melons.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with reading this article in the Illustrated Weekly at breakfast tables in Los Angeles and vicinity it will be possible for all readers and other inhabitants (if there are any such) to enjoy a luscious melon from Imperial county at their morning, noonday or evening meal. This is early for this fruit to be on the tables of the people, generally speaking, but not for California.

There are about 5000 carloads of melons in Imperial county. And that is a great many to produce in a single county. Someone says of the melons that if placed end to end they would make a string of cantaloupe crates from Brawley to Los Angeles, and then weave through every block of the 166 miles of paved streets in the city, ripple down the coast past Los Angeles Harbor to San Diego Harbor, and then following the automobile lines over the mountains, go back into their native valley and make the complete circle.

The crates will number 1,500,000, and they will average forty-five melons to the crate. At $1 a box to the grower it will mean $1,500,000 returns on the product gathered from 7650 acres. This is about $200 an acre. All these melons will not come to Los Angeles nor be consumed in California. There is not an important nook or corner in the United States or Canada that will not be reached by some of this luscious fruit.

To Make Men.

THE original Yankees who settled on the bleak New England shore used to boast that where their land was too impoverished to raise cereal or fruit crops they planted a little red schoolhouse and raised men. The crop was about the finest ever produced in all the gardens of the world where humanity was raised, and all America is following the example of the Mayflower immigrants and their descendants. It is a good example to follow, and of course Los Angeles is in the front ranks of the procession.

The new Franklin High School, on which work will begin immediately, is to be on a commanding elevation in the heart of the Highland Park district. It will be one of the largest and finest of the public schools of the city. The site is to consist of about five and a half acres and the Board of Education has purchased across the street six acres for an athletic field. The design is classical and striking. The structure will be 200 feet long and 100 feet deep. On the ground floor will be housed sloyd shops, drawing and tracing-rooms, and the upper floors will be divided into thirty classrooms. There will be a cafeteria on the ground floor with a seating capacity of 600.

Out at Vermont avenue and West First street there is to be built immediately another magnificent intermediate school. The property is a part of the old Mitchell estate, and is really a park, with beautiful trees of admirable growth. It has a frontage of 621 feet on Vermont avenue and of 590 on First street, 235 feet stretch along the edge of the Silver Lake Parkway, and 255 feet on Juanita avenue. There will be two buildings in the main group, back fully 100 feet from Vermont avenue, shaped like an H and having extreme dimensions of 245 by 144 feet. There will be more than sixty rooms in all.

A third fine school is the Buchanan-street grammar school, between Avenues 50 and 51.

The country is in the school-building business, too. Work is now in progress on a fine high school at Lancaster to supply all the Antelope Valley.

A Touch of Switzerland.

UP IN the high Sierras 7000 feet above Fresno a new hotel has been started in the snow where a blanket of twenty-three inches of "the beautiful" lies all over the mountains. It is to be known as Huntington Lodge, and is an appendix of the Huntington Hotel at Pasadena. The new structure will cost about $30,000. The site lies above Big Creek, where electricity is generated and brought to the city of Los Angeles and all over Southern California.

Perfect Babies.

OUT at Pomona, the beautiful heart of the beautiful San Gabriel Valley, they held a baby show the other day where 102 little specimens of California humanity were weighed, measured and otherwise inspected. The perfect score was 100, and only three of the babies fell below 90. Robert Holman, twenty months old, carried off first honors with a score of 99½. Two others scored 99 and were awarded diplomas. Three babies were in the 98 per cent. class.

The same soil and the same climate which produce fine oranges, cabbages, potatoes, cereals and other fruits and vegetables, also on and in which fine horses, sheep, cows and other domestic animals flourish, produce fine babies. California is noted for its fine horses and other magnificent live stock, and the California man of the future will be about as near perfect as anything humanity can produce.

The test applied at Pomona was of course almost entirely if not entirely physical, but the same influences that produce physical humanity in a perfect condition will produce also high-grade intellectual and spiritual humanity. Southern California is the future home of the art and literature of America. The same influences that made the Greeks of old intellectual leaders among all mankind, that later set the Italians on a pedestal artistically and in literature, the influences that produced Velasquez and Goya in Spain, are at work here every moment of the day and night in producing human brains with artistic and literary inspiration in their every fiber.

Veni, Vidi, Vici.

CAESAR came, saw and conquered. The Realty Board of Los Angeles, about the middle of May, took a trip to the Antelope Valley. They, too, came and saw, but instead of conquering they were conquered. If any body of men in the world know soils and climates, location, exposure and their values, the Los Angeles Realty Board cannot be left out of the category.

Some thirty years ago a premature boom started up in the Antelope Valley with Lancaster as its center. Great changes have been taking place in the valley since then, and lands that at that time no sensible person would touch at $10 an acre are now being advertised as cheap at a price of $225 an acre. Of course, there are cheap lands in the Antelope Valley still, very cheap, and they are worth a good deal more than the prices put upon them. The operators of thirty years ago were for the most part speculators pure and simple. Since then pioneer adventurers have gone into the valley to make homes, not to speculate, and where the speculators failed the homemakers have succeeded. It took capital, pluck and perseverance to show the possibilities of Antelope Valley, and the results are now patent to the eyes of all beholders. It was a matter of knowing how to do it, having the means to do it with and the perseverance to stick to it. It is not yet a place for weaklings, either in purse, or muscle, or mind, to go into. But when the pioneers have once developed the valley, then it will be possessed of beautiful homes for people weak in health and in pocket, too.

Fun Here Sure.

NEXT Saturday, May 29, The Times is to hold an auto show, when a trip will be taken, starting at the Times building in Los Angeles, out to Pasadena, up to Altadena, through La Canada, by Glendale, then following the Southern Pacific tracks through Burbank and San Fernando, visiting the mission, coming down to Van Nuys, going westward on Sherman Way through Marion to Owensmouth, then through the Calabasas mountains over the new Topanga-Malibu road, through Santa Monica, and home by Beverly to the starting point.

If there is any foolish or ignorant person on earth who thinks there are no thrills in this trip, he is very much mistaken. In Pasadena there will be seen many of the handsomest residences surrounded by the handsomest gardens in the country. Out through La Canada will be seen new development of lands once thought useless, now charming. Through Glendale, a vineyard twenty years ago, the route goes; through Burbank, a barren spot on the hillside thirty years ago, up by the historic old mission of San Fernando, down through the marvelous San Fernando Valley with its matchless development of half a dozen years, along Sherman Way the finest stretch of boulevard in the world with a thrill in nearly every mile.

From scenes soft with the highest kind of civilization the trip passes through a region as wild as a jungle in Africa or India into Calabasas and on down over the Topanga-Malibu mountains as rough as Switzerland without its snows, and views out over the ocean as charming as anything the Riviera can boast, or any other spot on all the Seven Seas.

Utilizing Our Opportunities.

THE world has got to have playgrounds, and humanity has always sought some region with matchless natural scenery for its playgrounds. These playgrounds may be along the French-Italian Riviera, where everything is soft and smooth as silk with high civilization, or they may be up on the icebound, snow-covered heights of the Swiss Oberland.

We have all the softness and attractions of Italy, and here is to be the playground of America. Italy and Switzerland have been using their advantages and spreading their attractions for generations and ages. We are at the beginning of our making of a playground of America here in Southern California. But we are learning, and will make it exceedingly attractive as the years pass by.

For weeks this summer there will be a pageant here in Los Angeles in which more than 10,000 children will participate, guided by a score of efficient organizations. About a year ago the Women's Million Club evolved the idea of this Pageant of Childhood, and the Board of Education took it up. The scenes presented will be radiant in color and redolent of history. The idea is an excellent one, and the execution will be quite in keeping with the conception. For Los Angeles people, and particularly Los Angeles women, when they put their hands to the plow, never draw back until they gather in the full sheaves of the harvest.

A Big Rose Show.

ALL Southern California is one big rose show just now. There are literally millions of beautiful blooms sweetening the air and delighting the eye. The cool, cloudy weather and late rains have suited the roses, and the queen of all flowers was never more abundant or more perfect than this year.

Our hedges and yards are masses of color, our pergolas and verandas are heavy with roses of every variety. In fact, there are so many perfect blossoms that we don't half appreciate them. Exquisite buds that would be cherished treasures—and bring a high price—in the East, hang their dainty heads and drift into fallen petals, unnoted. Blossoms that would take prizes at any floral show pass without attracting attention. A single one of our laden rose bushes, set down in an eastern yard, would create a sensation that would draw the countryside. But where a dozen, or a hundred, such bushes are clustered in a single yard or block, we see them only en masse. And it does seem almost criminal to grow so many roses that we cannot pay each bud and bloom the tribute due to its perfection of beauty. It's a pity we cannot put our superabundance in the reach of the rose lovers all over the world who would count each specimen as a gift of the gods, and whose rose-hunger is never satisfied.

Happy Day at Clarkdale.

CLARKDALE is a mining town in Verde Valley, five miles from Jerome, Ariz. Saturday, May 15, all Clarkdale and all Jerome, too, and nearly all of Arizona, for that matter, were made happy. The great event was the blowing in of the new United Verde smelter, on which former Senator W. A. Clark of Montana and his associates have "blown in" about $2,500,000 in hard cash. The new smelter has a capacity of 2500 tons of ore a day, more than double the previous output. It is described as a thoroughly up-to-date plant.

Notes of Progress.

Out in the Pomona Valley between Chino and Corona lies a piece of property known as the Brent ranch. Sam Klammer, Mayor of Fort Collins, Colo., has paid $65,000 for this property for the purpose of raising bullfrogs.

The Bank of Italy is handsomely and comfortably housed in its new quarters in the fine new Haas building, corner of Seventh and Broadway.

Pomona is to have its new hotel, thanks to the enterprise and liberality of A. M. Avis. It will stand on the corner of Third street and Garey avenue, and the contract for the structure has been let to the Milwaukee Building Company of Los Angeles.

L. Coltrin, originator of Uncle Sam's breakfast food, has leased premises on San Pedro street south of Twelfth, where he will establish a branch manufactory for his cereal.

Peter Nicholas has eighty acres of cabbages near Fullerton from which he expects to receive an income of $12,000.

The Girls' Collegiate School, at West Adams and Hoover streets, is so prosperous that the accommodations will be enlarged materially.

At Manhattan Beach a two-story frame store and hotel building is under way at a cost of $12,000.

Louis G. Bergren & Son of San Francisco have secured the contract for the buildings of the State Hospital at Norwalk at $115,000.

Herbert Coppell of the Maitland-Coppell Company of New York has bought a magnificent site of five acres overlooking the Arroyo Seco at a cost of $18,000, on which he intends to build a palatial home.

The Human Body—Its Care, Use and Abuse.

Diet and Intestinal Bacteria.

IT IS well known that the intestinal tract is inhabited by a great variety of bacteria. In certain diseases which affect the alimentary canal, such as typhoid, dysentery and cholera, a specific type of bacteria predominates over the other varieties, producing definite symptoms which persist until a normal proportion of the harmless bacteria has been restored. But it is found, also, in health as well as in disease, the kind, as well as the number of bacteria, may be determined within certain limits by various articles of diet.

Thus it is found that if an animal is fed on a high protein diet consisting chiefly of meat and eggs, a certain type of bacteria predominates; but if this diet is changed to one made up largely of milk, sugars and starches, the character of the intestinal bacteria changes, and an entirely different type predominates. These changes are accompanied with corresponding increase, or diminution in the amount of fermentation in the alimentary tract, which is dependent upon bacterial action.

These observations are of practical value in treating certain diseased conditions, and also in correcting cases of disagreeable intestinal fermentation and flatulence which are often a source of discomfort. If intestinal fermentation is present in persons accustomed to a high protein diet, a change should be made to a ration containing more milk and starchy vegetables, such as potatoes and rice. Fermentation that is caused by a strictly vegetarian diet may often be corrected by adding meat, cheese or eggs to the ration.

It should be remembered that milk alone will not bring about the desired results as readily as a combination of milk with certain vegetables. This knowledge is utilized in the treatment of many conditions where formerly a strict milk diet was prescribed, the milk being supplemented by the addition of a certain quantity of vegetables.

The Effect of "Packs."

Dr. I. H. Hirschfield, in his book dealing with the heart and blood vessels and general management of the body, makes the following useful suggestions about "packs:"

An excellent remedy for poor circulation, unsatisfactory sleep and for the removal of impurities from the blood are "packs." A three-quarter pack is given by spreading on the bed a warm woolen blanket long enough to reach from tne arm-pits to the ankle. Over the woolen blanket a linen sheet is spread, reaching from the feet to a point five fingers below the arm-pit. This linen sheet had been moistened thoroughly with cold water and wrung out as dry as possible. The patient lies with the arms held over the head on the wet sheet, in which he is wrapped; then he is wrapped in the woolen blanket after which he puts his arms down and the whole body is covered with two more blankets. His position should be comfortable, the upper part of the back and head elevated as when asleep. A cold compress must be put on the forehead and changed whenever it gets warm.

In "packs" the body gets warm after a short time, and the heat and increased blood-stream running from the congested inner organs into the blood vessels of the skin, gives the same effect as the Nauheim bath. The difficulty is that the "pack" must be taken with cold water, in order to insure quick reaction and people not accustomed to cold water, often do not like them or do not stand them well. Yet there is probably no better way to get rid of "old Adam" and regenerate the body than a four to six weeks' cure with "packs" and a restricted diet.

Blood Changes Produced by Exercise.

The disappearance of headaches, muscle twinges, joint pains and the general feeling of exhilaration produced by a few minute's exercise, is probably due to the change in the blood that takes place almost immediately. Even a very few moments of such muscular exertion as walking rapidly, running, swimming or gymnastics, produce an increase in the number of red and white blood corpuscles and also an increase in the volume of blood. The exact amount of this increase varies in different individuals, and in the same individual at different times. But the percentage of increase in the red corpuscles may be as high as 22 and that of the white corpuscles may be 130.

The sudden increase in the number of corpuscles is accounted for in one of two ways: either the corpuscle "factories" in the body suddenly become active, or else a certain number of corpuscles which are stagnated in various out-of-the-way places in the body (presumably in the capillaries) are thrown into the general circulation. But in any event, the effect is the same—that is, a general "freshening up" of the blood which tends to stagnate in persons of sedentary habits. And since exercies hastens the destruction of a certain number of corpuscles, the system must begin manufacturing a fresh supply immediately. In this way, a few minute's exercise literally produces "new blood."

It is found that the blood tends to become diluted almost immediately after exercise ceases. But if a tightly drawn belt is placed about the abdomen this dilution is prevented in a large measure. This indicates that the usual stagnation place of the corpuscles is in the abdominal region and that this stagnation is prevented by pressure of the belt. It also explains the usefulness of the "girded loin" during muscular exertion.

Special Use for Pigskin.

Skn grafting for assisting nature to furnish a new cuticle covering where the skin has been destroyed by injury, is an old and usually successful operation. Ordinarily the material employed for this purpose is human skin, either taken from other parts of the injured person's body, or from some other individual. Sometimes neither of these sources is available, for one reason or another; and then the surgeon must turn to the lower animals for his grafting material. Recently it has been demonstrated that the skin of young pigs answers the purpose admirably.

The method of procedure, as described by Dr. C. S. Venable, is as follows: A young pig, two to six months old, is etherized, and the site from which the grafts are to be taken, preferably the rump, shaved and cleansed with soap, water and a rag. The area is sponged with gasolene and finally with 50 per cent. alcohol or a one in 20,000 solution of biniodide of mercury. In removing the graft, the skin is put on the stretch with hooks or clamps in the direction in which it is to be sliced, and with a thin-bladed razor strips of epidermis are removed. These are transferred to the wound and held in place by a specially-devised meshed dressing. These grafts "take" in a few days, and eventually form a perfectly good cuticle.

Since the pigskin is covered with bristles, and contains bristle follicles, one would naturally suppose that this new skin surface over the grafted area might continue to produce a kind of hairy growth not altogether pleasing to the human recipient. Such is not the case, however. The thin slices of pigskin do not reach to the depth of the bristle follicles. And, even should they do so, these follicles atrophy and disappear, as the human system rejects the pig's bristles, although it accepts other portions of the animal's skin.

Ergotherapy, the Therapy of Occupation.

Systematic occupation, which is known technically as "ergotherapy," and generally as "work treatment," is not only helpful to persons in normal health, but is especially useful in treating certain types of nervous and mental disorders. It should not be understood that drudgery, haphazard occupations, or work that does not aim at some definite accomplishment, constitute work treatment in the therapeutic sense. For these conditions do not "help us to forget the past, meet the present, and look to the future," which is the main object of ergotherapy.

The idea that work is healthful, and idleness harmful, is not new. Yet, curiously enough, the practical application of this idea in treating diseases is of comparatively recent development. All work, to be actual work must have an element of drudgery. But unless this element is subordinated, and unless the work selected is of a character which produces tangible results, there will be little benefit derived from it, either to the muscular or the nervous system. Gymnastics, for example, taken perfunctorily because of a sense of duty, are far less effective in developing the muscular system than games in which there is a stimulative element of competition. A good game, well played, or a good day's work, well done, both imply something definitely accomplished, not merely effort pitted against a measured space on the clock dial.

Thus interest and accomplishment are the basis for ergotherapy. For this reason persons who administer the work treatment successfully, whether to self or others, must find some form of occupation that is pleasant, or at least not repellant, but one that is also productive of results.

The Trend of Vegetarianism.

Vegetarianism, which for many years was based largely on moral, religious, or sentimental grounds, has shown a tendency recently to seek a firmer foundation on the accepted facts of nutrition. This rational attitude is indicated by the statement of a prominent, and ardent advocate of meatless diet, who asserts that a vegetarian in the modern application of the term, is a person who uses meat in moderate quantities, or only occasionally, in contradistinction to the habitual user. And he seeks to justify the use of this selective diet on scientific grounds.

"It is science," he asserts, "that will rescue vegetarianism from the exaggerations of well-meaning but not altogether rational persons. We do not believe that a vegetarian diet is good whatever may be its composition, and would reserve our right to judge any fad with proper scientific scrutiny. To instinctive feeling, we need to oppose, nowadays, rational feeling."

Such an attitude marks the passing of the "fad" part of vegetarianism. But this does not imply that the practical advantages of a restricted meat diet is denied, but quite the reverse in this instance. Meat-eating in certain conditions is undoubtedly harmful; and even in health, meat is frequently used in excessive quantities, particularly by persons of sedentary habits. Vegetarianism was simply a practical protest against this excessive protein diet. But like many other popular reactions, it was carried to an extreme by misguided enthusiasts. Thus it became a fad—a term that implies whimsical, fantastic notions carried to excess.

Now that the pendulum seems to be swinging the other way, vegetarianism, in the sense of restricted meat diet, is almost certain to find its proper niche of usefulness.

A New Treatment for Hay Fever.

It has long been known that hay fever is caused by the pollen of plants. Indeed, the scientific name of hay fever is pollenosis. It is not the pollen of every plant which causes the disease, however, and comparatively few people are sensitive to the pollen of any plant to such a degree as to develop hay fever. Yet the unfortunate person who is susceptible to the effect of one kind of pollen, may be also susceptible to another, so that he may have different kinds of pollenosis at the times of year corresponding to the prevalence of one or the other of the kinds of pollen to which his system is sensitive.

These assertions about the action of pollen are not based upon theoretical speculation, but may be demonstrated in practice. Thus, if a series of weak pollen extracts are prepared, and a drop of each instilled into the corner of the eye, the one to which the individual is sensitive will cause a slight congestion of the membranes, while none of the others produce any effect. Or the same thing may be accomplished by scraping the skin a little at any convenient point, and rubbing the pollen itself over the abraded surface. The particular pollen to which the person is sensitive will cause a definite reaction, the others produce no effect even in a person subject to other forms of hay fever. And none of the pollens cause a reaction in individuals who are not sensitive to the disease.

It is necessary to determine the particular kind of pollen that is responsible for the symptoms in each case if curative or protective treatment is to be successful. For it should be understood that the symptoms of hay fever are pretty much alike, whether they be caused by ragweed, rose, or any one of half a dozen other kinds of pollen.

Method of Treatment.—The discovery that pollen seems to act in much the same way in producing hay fever that germs do in producing infectious diseases, has suggested a means of combating the disease. It is known that germ diseases are capable of gaining foothold in the system when the resistance is lowered, but that the system develops a resistance to the particular germ as a result of its action. We call the resistance immunity, and it may be transient as regards the action of certain germs, such as those producing common colds, or permanent, as in the case of smallpox. But it is the result of the action of the germs themselves which change the system so that it will no longer support their growth.

A corresponding change in the system takes place in hay fever, the pollen first causing the symptoms of the disease, but finally succumbing to the resistance which it has created. The condition of immunity only lasts a short time, however, as shown by repeated attacks. But it is possible to produce somewhat more permanent immunity, without actually producing the hay-fever symptoms, by giving minute doses of the pollen, gradually increasing these until the system will tolerate large quantities without showing the usual symptoms of the disease. When this stage is reached the person is immune to the effects of the pollen, and for some time thereafter he will be immune to hay fever; but the exact period of this immunity has not been definitely determined as yet.

The test made to determine when the stage of immunity is reached by graduated dosage system, is practically the same as the test which determines the specific pollen that causes it, namely, by scraping the skin, and rubbing on the pollen itself. When the skin no longer reacts to the pollen, the stage of immunity is reached.

It has been determined that wheat, barley, oats, and rye are responsible for many cases of spring hay fever; while thistles, corn, and daisies help to produce the fall crop.

Reason for His Politeness.

"Shoestring's untied, ma'am," a small boy called out to the stout woman who moved majestically up the street. "I'll tie it for you."

Even a less haughty woman would have found it difficult to treat with disdain so kind an offer, and she drew back her skirt in acceptance of his attention.

The little boy pulled the string tight and smiled up at her. "My mother's fat, too," he explained.—[The Independent.

At the Pink House.

A TALK WITH THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC.

CONGRESS AND ITS PALACE OF GOLD—A BUILDING SCANDAL WHICH INVOLVED MILLIONS—ARGENTINE GRAFT AND GRAFTERS — QUEER LAWS AS TO WILLS, CHURCHES, LIBRARIES AND SCHOOLS. QUEER FEATURES OF A GREAT ARGENTINE NEWSPAPER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BUENOS AIRES.—I have just returned from an interview with the President of the Argentine Republic. My audience was arranged through our embassy, and His Excellency received me in the great government palace, facing the water front at the lower end of the Plaza de Mayo. This palace covers more than two acres. It is 400 feet long and 250 feet wide, being one of the largest buildings on the South American continent. It is made of brick covered with stucco, and its old rose color reminds one of the great Winter Palace of Petrograd, on the banks of the Neva. On account of the color it is known as the Pink House, and in this respect is in striking contrast to our White House, on the banks of the Potomac. The Pink House is several times the size of the White House. It has three stories, and its surroundings, including the many officials in livery, are grander than those about President Wilson. I entered it from the Plaza de Mayo, being led through the building by Capt. Lynch, the military attache of the President. We first passed through the wide vestibule, ascended marble stairs to the second story, and there met Senor Atilio Basilari, the introducer of foreigners. After chatting with him a while I was taken into the audience-room and presented to the President.

The President of Argentina is Dr. Victorino de la Plaza. He is, I judge, about 50 years of age. He has had a long public career, having been Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and held other high offices. He was elected Vice-President of the republic in 1910, at the time that Dr. Roque Saenz Pena was elected President, and upon the death of the latter last fall he became by law the Chief Executive of the nation. The Presidents here are elected for six years, and there are no second terms. The doctor's term will expire in 1916.

The President's Personal Appearance.

President Victorino de la Plaza rose as I entered the room and offered his hand. He is a short, fleshy man with a round, rosy, full face and bright eyes that look out through narrow slits. The cartoonists have caricatured him in the press as a Chinese, and in some respects his features are almost Celestial. He is a man of education and culture. He has a bright mind, and his opinions are positive. He spoke freely, but rather diplomatically, about the relations of the United States and the Argentine, saying that he was glad our relations were growing closer and closer, and that he wanted to see the trade between the two countries increased to its utmost extent. Said he:

Dr Victorino de la Plaza

"I am glad that you people are taking our meat and corn, and that, as time goes on, we will have a more varied exchange of commodities. As it is now, you are furnishing the most of our agricultural machinery, and we are increasing our purchases of goods of every description. Trade must be reciprocal in order to increase in volume, and the present situation is such that we are growing more and more dependent upon each other. This is especially so with Argentina, whose banking and trade are so much dependent upon foreign conditions. I am glad to see American banks being founded in this country, and I should like to see better steamship connections between us and the United States."

I asked His Excellency about the feeling in the Argentine as to Uncle Sam, and whether there existed any jealousy in regard to the United States. The President replied:

"If there is jealousy I am not aware of it. The relations between the two countries are of the friendliest possible nature. Argentina has enormous resources, and it is growing so fast that it has not time to be jealous of anyone. It is well satisfied with its place in the sun, and also with what the good Lord has given it in the way of resources."

Upon this I asked as to the Argentine's future. His Excellency replied that his country was just beginning to grow, and that it would continue to grow in population and wealth for generations to come. He said that the nation would eventually be one of small farmers instead of large ones, and that the great estancias would be divided and a time of intensive cultivation would come. Said he:

"The country could easily support ten times its present population, and it would then have only 100,000,000. It would then have only about as many as your country has now."

His Excellency spoke of the Panama Canal, saying that, although it might benefit the western part of Argentina, its chief value would be to the west coast of this continent. He referred to the San Francisco exposition, saying that the exhibit sent from here is as the country can furnish, but that it seemed to him like carrying coals to Newcastle to take the products of the Argentine to tne United States, as the two countries are both agricultural and pastoral, and their industries are much the same.

I asked His Excellency whether there would ever be a United States of South America or a union of the South American republics. He replied that he did not think so and doubted tnat such a union would be desirable.

The Coming Argentino.

I asked as to the Argentino of the future, speaking of the immigration from Europe and the possibility that the country might be Italianized thereby. Mr. Victorino de la Plaza replied:

"The Argentino of the future will be much the same as the Argentino of today. No matter what the nationality of the immigrant we find that we soon assimilate him and he becomes an Argentino and a patriot. We are making Argentinos of our immigrants just as in the past you have made good Americans of the mixed elements you have brought in from the various countries of Europe. We have the same advantage that you have had, in that we can put the immigrants out on the farms, and in that each man can have his own land and own home and grow up with the country. This makes him a better citizen than if he were herded with others of his own kind in such congested districts as the cities and mines, as is now the case with much of your immigration. We have so much land that I believe we can assimilate our immigrants for a long time to come."

Leaving the Pink House I took a taxicab and, for about 35 cents of our money, rode through the wide Avenida de Mayo, the Pennsylvania avenue of Buenos Aires, to the new Capitol, where Congress meets. This building is still in course of construction, but it is already one of the most imposing structures of the world. It stands in front of a magnificent plaza, which was carved out of the business part of the city. To make it four solid blocks of building were torn down and the ground was built up and covered with grass, trees and shrubs. Fine statues were erected, fountains were instituted and other decorations made at a cost of $5,000,000. In order to have the park ready for the centennial display of 1910 the work was all done in ninety days.

The Capitol faces this plaza. It reminds one a little of our Capitol at Washington. It is a marble building of four stories, from whose center rises a great dome, which weighs 30,000 tons. The dome rests upon pillars of white granite, and its weight is such that in order to strengthen it it was necessary to construct an inverted dome beneath it. The building is of Graeco-Roman style. Its center has the form of a semi-circle and there is a wing at each end and a projecting pavilion at each corner. The buildings contain the national halls of the House and Senate, the Secretaries' offices, the committee rooms and a library. All of its furnishings are magnificent, and it is like the State House of Pennsylvania and the Capitol at Albany in the extravagance of its expenditure. Indeed, there has been so much scandal connected with it that it has been nicknamed the palace of gold.

A Costly Capitol.

The original estimates for it were 6,000,000 pesos, but it has already cost over 30,000,000. Something like $14,000,000 was spent for cement alone, and $2,000,000, so the people say, was paid out for work that was never done. . Another $2,000,000 was squandered on bronze capitals, $3,000,000 on marble statues, and $7,000,000 more in mistakes on the dressing and stucco of the fronts. Over and above this, fabulous sums were spent for decoration and furniture, and no one knows where much of the money went. Just at this time, when we are looking into the pork barrels of our Congress at home, the people here are beginning to question the pork barrel of this Capitol building, and, in the hard times created by the war, to wonder whether some of it may not be recovered. Committees have been appointed to get to the bottom of the building scandal and to expose the graft and the grafters.

The Congressional session of the Argentine Republic is held in our summer, which is the winter on this side of the Equator. It lasts from May 1 to September 30, and the sittings for the House take place Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and on the other days of the week for the Senate. The Congress is formed in much the same way as ours. There are two bodies, the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate has thirty members, two from the capital, and two from each province elected by a special body of electors, who meet at the capital, and by the Legislatures in the provinces. The House of Representatives consists of 120 Deputies, elected by the people. By the Constitution there must be one Deputy for every 33,000 inhabitants. The Deputies are elected for four years, but one-half must go out every two years. A Deputy must be 25 years of age before he can run, and have been for four years a citizen.

The Senators must be thirty years of age before they are eligible, and must have been citizens for six years. They are elected for terms of nine years instead of six years, as with us. Both Senators and Deputies receive salaries of $7500 a year. The President gets an annual salary of $42,000 of our money, and he has, in addition, about $13,000 for his official expenses. The Orange Marketing Methods Considered.

By M. V. Hartranft.

CONTROLLING PRICES.

ORANGES are now selling at normal prices in the eastern market. The loss by drop in holding from February to April is important and discounts part of the gains made by the industry on the present revival in prices. The past two seasons have scored adversities that have grounded a demand for more experiments in marketing. In a recent issue we discussed this question largely from the standpoint of the powerful concentration of demand centered in the public auction rooms at all the commercial centers. We referred vaguely to the size of the undertaking involved in the establishment of retail stores throughout the country. We did not, however, desire to throw cold water on any proposed step forward, as an occasional correspondent thinks. Let us take every reasonable step forward, but please don't jump and rock the boat. There are many thousands of fruit jobbers in the country and there are hundreds of thousands of retailers. The buying force of all these factors is now concentrated competitively in these public auction rooms.

As heretofore pointed out, the fruit auctions are open to the public in lots of twenty boxes or more. Any old peddler can go in the room and bid against the highest class grocer or fruiterer. The same peddler can go up the street with his push cart and cry the same oranges out at the front door of the customers of the aforesaid grocer or fruiterer. This competition makes the price to consumers self-regulative. Any better regulation than this must needs be very scientifically applied. These auction prices are publicly made and publicly published in the Daily Times every morning following the sale. Every citrus grower is informed daily exactly what his own fruit is selling for and the prices on all other citrus fruit in California. Every grower knows as much about the situation as any dealer or speculator. No speculator can drive up to a citrus fruit grower in California and bargain for the crop at a big discount. If there is a turn in the market for the better the orange or lemon grower knows all the details of brands, districts and prices next morning at his breakfast table as he reads his Times. Great and sudden changes in apples and other fruits often occur, and it is sometimes many days and weeks before the commercial information gets back into the country districts. During such periods the speculators are active and buy up at discounts the entire holdings of the growers who are not in immediate touch with the market. No other community of agriculturists in the world is so completely informed upon the markets as the citrus fruit growers of California, through these daily telegraph reports on lot lines of twenty boxes.

Now, with this information at hand, based on the combined buying power of all retailers and jobbers, it is well that experiments into the retailing field should be taken cautiously. Therefore, I suggest that my friends who think I overstate the size of the problem should begin on the Los Angeles market. Open your retail store here, and knock the retailers out of their profit, if you can. If you want to demonstrate how easy it is done, just go down to your local depot and try to sell oranges to the passengers on the trains. The newsboys are charging the passengers 5 cents each for oranges as the train rolls by your orchard. You will discover that someone has paid the railway company for the privilege of retailing on the train; that it takes one young man's entire time to attend to the train, and that you cannot get very far in your plan.

When you start in on the larger plan in the city of Los Angeles you will find that you have some rents and licenses to pay. You will find some peddler going direct to your proposed customers, and, instead of your controlling the peddler, he will, in fact, control you and your prices.

You will find that the United States of America is full of a seething mass of Greek, Italian and Hebrew peddlers, who, with their constantly-increasing supply of children, are making it almost impossible for our American fruit jobbers and retailers to eke out an existence in the face of the blazing competition in the open auction, which is almost cruel in its grinding force. The high-class grocer and fruiterer has to buy in competition with the peddlers and meet the same fellows in selling competition, and in addition uphold rentals or land increment.

Chicago is the only important center in which the price-making power on California oranges is left to private bargaining. Why the leaders do not force the auction system at Chicago is not known. That a complete auction system is not suddenly started in Los Angeles is not strange, for if done on a right scale it means a fearful revolution, and large bodies move slowly.

The marketing question is a very live one now, and it will only subside with the continuance of better markets. The talk has done no harm, and radical experiments will do no harm, if the same are made as tests in the home market of Los Angeles. Of the many letters this department has had on this subject the following from L. R. Anderson is undoubtedly of especial interest. Its value upon this subject rests on his long experience at both ends of the industry, and we, therefore, at the expense of reiteration on some points, quote his communication in full, as follows:

"Just a line of appreciation in reference to your comprehensive discussion of marketing problems which appeared in the Sunday issue of The Times of May 21. This article and the premises on which you base your contention are fundamentally sound. Although these questions have been uppermost in the thoughts of the growers of the Pacific Coast, and especially the citrus growers, for many years, I regret to find, upon returning to my native Southern California after a period of over fifteen years spent in eastern and northern markets, there still exists a great deal of misapprehension and criticism of the auction system as a factor of distribution.

"Like many others, it was necessary for me to come into actual daily contact with the various auctions in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Chicago and other smaller markets before I became convinced of the great potential value of the auction in relation to our California products. The open auction gets the result we want; it moves the goods for cash regardless of quality or condition; there are no reclamations; it covers the widest possible extent of trade from the most exclusive and delectable to the most humble peddler, who is willing to buy the poorer and 'off' stock and sort it up. It is without question a powerful factor in getting the maximum result for the seller, while at the same time giving to the buyer the selection of what he can use to the best advantage and what he is willing to pay the most money in order to get; in fine, it concentrates within the space of the four walls of the auction-room practically all of the purchasing power of that market at that particular moment, with the exception of possibly the speculative element, who are always buyers f.o.b. or otherwise if they think they can save anything thereby.

"There is ample proof of this; for example, a large city of upward of 600,000 population a few years ago was, prior to the advent of the California auctions in their market, using an estimated 200 cars of citrus fruit per year. After the advent of the auctions this immediately increased to 1200 cars per year. Whereas under the old private sale system the dealer would buy a car of oranges and stack it up in his house, with a profit of 25 to 50 cents, even 75 cents per box profit added, which frequently made the price look unattractive and restricted the movement, the buyers, large and small, now take from the auction catalogue just what they can use for their particular trade, and before the auction is over many a peddler is out in the residence districts ringing the door-bells and shouting out his wares. He has bought them without a large dealer's profit and is willing to sell them at a close price per dozen in order to sell out his load and go home to his family at night with the proceeds of his day's investment and labor.

"The auction is also an economic factor, from the fact that it is able to sustain itself upon the small commission of from 2 to 3 per cent. of the amount of the sales, and is ready to pay for all cars sold as soon as the sale is finished, taking the risk of collection upon its own individual organization. To sum up, one might say that the auction system as relates to fruit, is the acme of competitive conditions, and realizes the greatest possibilities in distribution and price, at the least expense, in its respective market.

"Is there any Utopian marketing system? To hear some of the new members among the growers discuss the question one might think there is. I hear the same discussions among the northwest fruit growers on apples today that we listened to here twenty years ago, even earlier, on our citrus. I have worked faithfully as one of the party militant in endeavoring to market a portion of the products of our section for an even twenty years this year, and I believe all of our respective systems have merit. But there is one thing of which I am fully convinced, and that is, it is not within the province of the growers to endeavor to personally reach the consumer direct. The history of the business is replete with the failures of even well organized growers' depots of retail distribution of recent years. Witness the latest, of only two years ago, when the apple growers of the western slope of Colorado opened up a retail store in Denver. About the same time the truck growers in Ohio opened up a store in Cleveland or Toledo, and there was also organized a retail farmers' organization in New York, all of which brought heavy losses upon the growers, and accomplished nothing of value. The manager of one of the institutions in a statement frankly admitted that after a fair trial they were forced to concede that they could not compete for the business on a competitive basis and save enough to meet expenses.

"There is a principle involved in this, which is immutable and inexorable: 'Every shoemaker to his last.' The various institutions from the growers' organization, through the various channels of trade to the consumer are needed for the economic distribution of food products, and every man in his proper relationship to the industry is an economic factor.

"No single system of itself would be complete.

"Is the F.O.B. system a success? Certainly, with respect to certain trade and sections.

"Is the cash buyer a success? Certainly, within certain limits.

"Are the transit and auction systems a success? Certainly, for the markets they cover and the degree of efficiency they can approach in distribution.

"Can any one of these systems be upheld as the only one to adopt in the marketing of a crop of 40,000 to 50,000 cars, and with an increasing tonnage for the future?

"On the contrary is it not a fact that the inefficient shippers and systems gradually sift out of their defects and shortcomings. Those which survive the crucible of Pacific Coast fruit marketing must have merit. Let us endeavor to support and build up those systems and those factors which have shown merit, large and small, in the belief that there is enough for all, and that all will be needed in the test of future requirements. Let us work for efficiency and economy, and let us also hope that before long even the railways, and growers or producers of this wealth, will also be able to work out some economies, as not far in the future we see even more highly competitive trade conditions between the increasing crops of other fruits, and an increasing tendency on the part of the consumer to ask the price and count the cost."

Grapes and Grape Shipping.

A light setting of grapes throughout the State with the exception of Malagas, seems to be definitely established. The hail and frost about May 1 affected the vineyards of Southern California considerably. In marketing circles this crop situation is considered a benefit rather than a loss, as it will relieve the pressure on the market to correspond in value to the crop shrinkage.

The development of late winter markets by shipping in sawdust, conducted in an experimental way for several years, has now become an established industry. The cardinal rules of this industry are now being worked out.

The Emperor grape is the best variety to handle in sawdust. The Tokay variety does not stand up as well. For sawdust packing all grapes must be picked before the rains come, but several irrigations during the season give a firmer holding grape.

Emperor grapes for shipping in the usual open crate may be gathered as late as November 15 in the Fresno district, but for sawdust packing the Emperors must be picked during the first half of October.

Only selected grapes should be packed in sawdust, and laid stem up in lug boxes. Clusters are not wanted but loose bunches into which the sawdust will work between the berries, are the best. The fruit is then left to cool over night. Then a layer of redwood kiln-dried sawdust sifted to the required fineness is put in the bottom of the drum. A two-inch layer of grapes on this is covered with another layer of sawdust which is worked into the bunches by the packers. Some extra sawdust is piled on and the outside of the drum is pounded around to sift the sawdust around so that each berry is in a solid cast.

A net weight of thirty pounds in each drum is trade custom.

Sawdust from redwood mills is used exclusively as the cork dust has not proven satisfactory.

In 1912 about fifty carloads were shipped packed thus. In 1913 the pack was about seventy-five carloads. The 1914 output was 300 cars, the returns for which from one shipping concern averaged the growers about $60 per ton.

Dried Fruit Outlook.

Many canners and packers of dried fruit announce that they expect to curtail their output this year and it is given out that the growers must likely be conent with the cost of production.

The basis of this gloomy outlook for these lines is the war, of course. Germany has been one of the largest consumers of our dried fruit and monetary exchange with Germany is about as difficult as the shipping to those ports. Up to the time of writing no prices for green fruit to growers have been announced by the canners.

It is true that there is a considerable hold-over in canned goods. It is also estimated that there is from 10,000 to 15,000 tons of prunes held over, and about 8000 tons of dried peaches left over out of a crop of 32,000 tons. Apricots are well cleaned up. There is a good consuming period on this side of the date that these figures were compiled and the biggest bulk of this stock may yet go to consumers.

We cannot ignore the fact that markets for these lines are curtailed and that the purchasing power of the foreign people who are used to eating these goods will be diminished even after the war is over. We must not, however, ignore the law of compensation, and up to the hour of the Lusitania incident the United States of America was swelling out into great commercial activity. We have received a stunning set-back by the Lusitania incident, and just how much of a one we will know better when this article appears than we know now. Low prices prevailing on these meritorious goods will attract the attention and admiration of the housewife, and it only requires low prices to stimulate a demand in this country that could sweep the warehouses clean.

The war has dulled many of our industries. Many manufacturers became frightened and trimmed their sails, only to wake up and find that they were hopelessly behind their orders. In the building material line the plight of the eastern manufacturers of cement was notable. In the same pessimistic attitude as now voiced by our fruit canners and dryers, the cement manufacturers, knowing their goods would not be taken on war orders, sat down and curtailed their output. They did not expect to be able to collect for last year's output from the Southern States. Apparently the situation changed over night. Of a sudden the association of manufacturers woke up to find that they were hopelessly behind in their orders and that a big wave of activity was prevailing throughout the East and Middle West. This did not come over night, but it came certainly and surely because the United States is upon a very solid commercial basis. We have successfully liquidated our past speculations, and nothing short of actual war participation can hold back the tide of commercial activity that is setting in.

How Argentine is Governed. By F. G. Carpenter.

each of the eight Cabinet officers gets about $12,000 per annum.

There are property qualifications for all Congressmen, and a Senator must have an income of at least $800 a year. All money appropriations must originate in the House of Deputies, and only the Deputies have a voice in fixing taxation.

States and State Governments.

In addition to the national government, the republic has State governments and State Legislatures such as we have. Each of the fourteen provinces elects its own Governor, parliament and judges, and each has its own Constitution. Each has its own courts and its own laws for legal proceedings, but it can only make such laws as do not affect the national laws. On paper, the rights of the people are about the same as those of the United States, and the country is quite as free and democratic as ours. In reality, however, it is like every Latin-American republic, an oligarchy. The government is run by a few wealthy families, the aristocratic Argentinos dominating the whole. The great leaders have their official henchmen, and I am told there is a vast deal of graft. Argentina is much as the United States was in the days of Boss Tweed. I do not mean to say that there is no patriotism or honesty. Many of the better class Argentinos love their country, and are doing all they can to fight down the official corruption and to put their nation in the front rank among the republics.

In many ways this republic is better off than ours. As far as individual rights are concerned, there is liberty and equality, and before the law the foreigner has the same rights as a citizen. There are no titles of nobility. Property is inviolable, and the state sees that the father provides for his children. In our country a man can make a will giving his possessions to whomsoever or whatsoever he pleases and cut off his daughter or son with a nickel. In Argentina the laws provide that a father must leave his children four-fifths of his fortune, and a husband, if he has no children, has to leave half of his property to his wife. An unmarried son is compelled to leave his scendants can make wills disposing of their possessions as they see fit.

Religion is free in Argentina. Almost all of the people are Catholics, and the state gives some support to the Catholic church, but all other creeds are tolerated, and anyone may worship any god in any way he pleases.

Free Schools.

Primary education is free and compulsory for all children of from 6 to 14 years of age. The government has a national council of education, and at present about two-thirds of the children of school age are in attendance. The republic has in the neighborhood of 23,000 teachers and 800,000 pupils in the primary schools. It has 1000 teachers in the secondary schools, and there are thirty national colleges, with about 9000 students. There are sixty-seven normal schools and thirty-four schools for special instruction. There are national universities at Cordoba, Buenos Aires and La Plata, and the university at Cordoba is one of the oldest in the New World. It was founded in 1613, antedating Harvard by twenty-three years and the first charter of William and Mary by eighty years. There are also schools and colleges for women, and a large number of the teachers are women.

Intelligence in Argentina is of a high order. There are big libraries at Buenos Aires, and among them the National Library, which has 200,000 volumes. The country altogether has about 800 newspapers, of which more than 700 are in the Spanish language. There are sixteen newspapers published in Italian, ten in English, seven in German and others in Scandinavian, French and Russian.

Buenos Aires has a live, up-to-date press. It has its humorous papers, with striking cartoons, and illustrated journals that compare favorably with those of the United States. It has also great dailies, which have telegrams from all parts of the world, and which today have their war news quite as fully as the journals of New York. This is so of La Prensa and La Nacion. Both papers have been published regularly for hold high rank for their independent criticisms and their excellent news service. Buenos Aires has two English dailies. One is the Standard, founded in 1861 by the Mulhalls, the well-known statisticians, and the other is the Buenos Aires Herald, now managed by Mr. Reginald Lloyd. Both are enterprising, the Herald being especially noted for its agricultural and stock-breeding news.

A Great Newspaper.

During my stay here I have gone through some of the newspaper offices. That of La Prensa is famous all over the world. It stands on the Avenida de Mayo, not far from Florida street, and in the very heart of the city. The building is of white stone, five stories high, and a golden bronze figure of Fame rises eighteen feet above the top of its tower. The interior of this newspaper office is palatial, and some of its rooms would not be out of place in the home of a monarch. It has a festival hall, four halls for public gatherings, and quarters for the entertainment of distinguished visitors to Buenos Aires, consisting of a drawing-room, dining-room, and smoking and billiard-rooms, with dressing-rooms attached. The paper maintains a free public library, and it has a medical department, where doctors and specialists treat without charge all who will come. There is also a legal department, where anyone who wishes may have the advice of a reputable lawyer as to his business or private rights, and a chemical laboratory devoted to experimental, agricultural and industrial uses. The Prensa has its own observatory and issues daily weather reports. It has a school of music, where the best vocal and instrumental instructors train without charge those who show signs of talent.

I have said that the Prensa is one of the leading papers of Argentina. It is without doubt one of the great papers of the world, and is at the head of its class in all South America. Its circulation often runs to 200,000 copies a day, and it is now using about thirty-five tons of white paper every twenty-four hours. Its machinery is run by electricity, and it has its own electric plant, with the electric plant of the city.

I have been interested in the advertisements of this paper, and in its charges, which vary according to the character and purse of the man advertising. For instance, an employer advertising for a servant pays 30 cents a line, while the servant advertising for a situation is charged only 10 cents a line. A doctor who wants patients must pay $2 a line, while a poor girl out of a job gets the same for 10 cents. The journal is full of small advertisements. Each month it contains about 60,000 of that nature, and every day it has from sixteen to twenty pages of official, professional, auction ads and other announcements. The paper altogether has about 300 employees. Its telegraphic tolls are close to $1000 a day, and its fees to correspondents run high into the thousands of dollars a year.

On Common Ground.

And one was made for lingerie
Of filigree and bows,
For sparkling rings and dainty things,
And powder on her nose.
Her slender feet in spats so neat
Made music everywhere.
And men they bent where'er she went
Before her beauty rare.

And one was made for laboring
Along the paths of life,
For gentleness of hands to press
Away the pain of strife.
She's kneeling where the stricken are
The living and the dead,
Doing her work without nor shirk
With ne'er a thrill of dread.

And, lo, behold! Miss Daintiness,
So frivolous and vain,
She treads among the fallen flung
Along the battle plain.
Unmindful of the shell above
That's bursting o'er her head,
She's working where the stricken are,
The living and the dead.

The Rebuilding of Belgium.

By J. L. Balderston.

LOOKING AHEAD.

LONDON, April 23.—Meeting a prominent English architect recently, it seemed natural to remark, in view of the almost complete stoppage of all building construction in Europe, "I suppose these are dull times for you?"

"Not a bit of it," he laughed. "Never been so busy in my life, and all the architects I know are working overtime."

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"Rebuilding Belgium," he said. "My office has been busy for ten weeks fixing up Dixmude. Nothing there but a heap of stones, you know. Harrison Duckworth is busy in Louvain. Somebody is working on nearly every town of any size the Germans have—"

"Hold on a minute," I countered. "How long is it since the Germans have evacuated Belgium?"

"Oh, it's all on paper," he admitted. "But you don't suppose the Belgians can afford to wait until they get home again to prepare for building? As a matter of fact, there is a great controversy between those who want their ruined towns rebuilt scientifically, and those who want things as they were before. Naturally, we architects favor the former, but it is the Belgians who own the property who have the last say."

This talk suggested an effort to find out who will pay for this restoration, and I learned that there are already three organizations raising money and making plans for rebuilding the wrecks left by the battles which have been fought, and those which may be fought, with more wreckage ensuing, before King Albert gets his country back again. These are the Everyman Belgian Relief and Reconstruction Fund, the Repatriation Fund and a fund raised by the Society of Friends. The repatriation fund is to be used entirely for rebuilding, the other two will combine the work of immediate relief with reconstruction. These funds are entirely distinct from the great charities here and in America whose sole object is to feed the starving population of Belgium, and it is not until the Germans are evicted that the repatriation fund, founded in September last by Mme. Vandervelde, wife of the Belgium Socialist leader and Minister of State, will be called upon.

There are 700,000 Belgian refugees in Great Britain at present, nearly all of them destitute. But Belgium is, or was, if you choose to put it that way, the thriftiest country in the world. One-fifth of the adults in Belgium owned their own houses before the war, and while now most of them are dependent on American and British bread for life, they still own the houses, or the places where the houses stood. Help for rebuilding when the Germans are beaten appeals to many workers among the stricken population as the duty of the more fortunate English, whose homes have been spared the horrors which fell upon those of their little ally, and it speaks volumes for the supreme confidence felt in England that the Germans will retrace their steps, and that soon, that committees are working already on restoration plans and paying scores of architects to give all their time to plans which are contingent on the defeat of the German hosts.

Emile Cammaerts, the Belgian who from the beginning of the war has done more than anyone of his countrymen toward helping the refugees and organizing the machinery of charity in this country, described the work which the repatriation fund contemplates. He said:

"The pro-Belgian activity in this country ought not to be limited to the sheltering of refugees. A time will come when these refugees will be able to go back to their villages. The sooner they go, the better. But how are they going to start work afresh in their wrecked houses without tools, without cattle, without seed, without the small capital which is absolutely necessary to undertake farming or any other business? The idea is to raise a certain sum of money in order to provide the Belgian laborer with the first necessities of life as soon as the allies, in their expected advance, will be able to push back the invaders from the positions which they occupy at the present moment; so that every progress on the western front may be accompanied by a corresponding progress in the repatriation of refugees from England and France, in the fertilization of the fields laid waste by the war and in the restoration of the economic production of that part of the country which shall have been torn from the enemy's grip.

"It is here that private help should step in, in order to bridge the gap between the advance of the troops and some effective state interference. It would, of course, be impossible to rebuild the destroyed towns and villages, but temporary wooden sheds could be erected, cattle, horses, plows, manure, seed, could be provided. The production of one year could be saved at a comparatively small expense.

"In any case, the benefits of such help—moral and material—would greatly compensate for the money laid out. Some refugee committees are at the present moment spending hundreds of pounds every week in order to provide their guests with the bare necessities of life. If these people cannot go back when their district is freed from the German occupation, most of them will be obliged to remain where they are. Would it not be better to provide for them in Belgium than in England? Would not the contributors to these local funds prefer to give their money for a healthy and fruitful work like this than for the barren and disheartening purpose of helping people simply to live without helping them to work?

"There is nothing more discouraging and mischievous than the misapplication of 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.' Of course the Germans have not appreciably retreated yet, but that movement, if it comes—and it is bound to come—will come suddenly. We ought to be prepared. True, we cannot start any practical work yet, but the machine may be put in order. We can prepare our organization. It is not so urgent to have money in hand yet, but we must know where to find it when the time comes; we want promises so that on the day of the long-wished for advance, behind the lines of the allied armies the busy villagers may creep, step by step, back to their shell-plowed fields, back to their wrecked villages, and set the kettle boiling on the burning ashes of their ruined houses."

Giant Police Chief.

[New York Sun:] Grantsburg, Wis., a hamlet where everybody is a peaceful citizen and not a dozen arrests are made in a year, is protected by the largest Chief of Police in the world, in big Gust Anderson. He is 7 feet 4 inches high, and weighs 340 pounds.

Big Gust, as he is known in Grantsburg by men, women and children, was born in Sweden in 1872. In 1892 he landed at Omaha, and spent a short time at work in the packing-houses carrying quarters of beef, often where two men were unable to handle the load, Gust would push them aside, pick up the load with ease and hang it in the storage room.

He served on the police force at Superior until he was stricken down with typhoid fever. After recovering from this he came to Grantsburg, and for thirteen consecutive years has been Chief of Police. Only once has any person had the grit to show battle. This was big Tom McLain, a lumberman of Stillwater, who considered himself an extraordinary large and powerful man. He started a disturbance such as to cause "Big" Gust to arrest him, which Gust finally did. Tom made but one lunge and Gust had him by the coat collar, and holding him with one hand off the ground, Tom begged for mercy and obediently walked with Gust to the village lock-up. Gust never has used the billy in an arrest.

Gust wears a No. 7⅛ hat, shoes 14½ inches long, 52 coat and trousers 44x39.

Plant Breeding.

UNCERTAINTIES IN APPLICATION OF MENDEL'S LAW.

SOME very wild stories regarding plant and animal breeding have of late been going the rounds of the press. It has been asserted that discovery of Mendel's law will make it possible for the plant breeder to accept orders for certain definite new characters in plants or flowers with an assurance that he will be able to make delivery of the same within a specified time. It has appeared in the press in this city that one may breed flowers for color and be as certain of results as though he were mixing primary colors in paints. This is decidedly and entirely untrue and it is at present much doubted if such certainty of results will ever be attained.

Mendel's law has helped us much and will help us more when more thoroughly understood, but no one has yet solved all its complexities, and while the whole world is carrying on extensive experiments and we are each year receiving more and new light, the trackless future is so vast and complex that the stoutest heart is appalled by the magnitude of the task of final solution of all the secrets of plant breeding.

No two plants are alike and every plant is made up of many complex characters. How then can we precisely predict results when we are dealing with unknown characters? There is no phase or angle of Mendel's law to which there are not marked exceptions. In some plants results work out with mathematical precision but we do not know they will come until they arrive. With proven plants we may confidently expect results to conform closely to what has been. In other words we can judge of the future only by the past.

Mendel himself reported cases where the ratio in appearance of a certain character ranged from 20 or 30 to 1 and in similar cases they would appear 1 to 1. Mendelism has its limitations. No one may know what plants will "Mendelize" until he tries them, for Mendel's law deals with mere characters, not with a plant as a whole. No plant is perfect and those we wish to work with may have as many undesirable characters as desirable ones. How may we preserve the one set and eliminate the other?

The plant breeder usually strives for new characters as well as new combinations of the old ones. He may strive for greater size and this is generally one of the characters he is reaching for, but Mendelism has nothing to do with augmented characters. Improvement of garden plants still rests largely upon selection and will so continue to the end of time notwithstanding the fact that Mendel's law is the greatest discovery made in that line in recent years. Nearly all that man may do was summed up by Darwin when he said: "The key is man's power of accumulative selection; Nature gives successive variations; man adds them up in certain directions useful to him." A knowledge of Mendelism assists the breeder to secure certain results more quickly than was possible before its discovery.

Geranium Hedges.

THERE are many geranium hedges and borders maintained of very ordinary plants. Geraniums are very cheap and grow easily from cuttings. Why not get a few of the better sorts, grow them, make cuttings and have an effect really attractive. Good plants of the best are but a dollar a dozen. Of all the writer has grown or observed a dark crimson single variety named Jacquerie is believed to be the best. After several years' trial in local gardens it has proven almost ideal. Use singles only. Except when one wishes a collection or choice and limited lot of geraniums the singles are by far the best. For hedges, borders and masses they have no equals.

Deciduous Shrubs.

DURING the past few months the weather has been ideal for flowering deciduous shrubs. It has been observed that seasons of abundant rainfall, with the downpour very evenly distributed, is an ideal one for this class of plants. In seasons of scanty rainfall they flower stingily and tardily. A great many of these shrubs are now past their blooming stage, yet in partially shaded positions deutzias and philadelphus are yet to bloom. Of all these none blooms finer than Deutzia creneta. Weigelias, which were in bloom two months ago, are excellent shrubs of this class. In seasons of light rainfall it will pay to soak the soil about deciduous trees and shrubs.

CHEROKEE ROSES.

The rapidity with which roses climb in California is at once noted by all visitors and none are more rampant than the Cherokees; none bear more abundant crops of flowers. The white is alone common; the pink has spread rapidly for the few years since its introduction, but the so-called red, or "Ramona," the jewel of the group, is as yet comparatively little known. The vine shown in the illustration is of three years growth, and presents an almost solid mass of flowers of large size.

Manuring the Soil.

IN GARDEN making the first essential is a heavy layer of barnyard manure placed on the surface and then turned under as deeply as it is possible to get it. If a lot has to be filled three or four feet in depth, it should first be covered with two feet of barnyard manure, on top of which should be placed two feet of good soil. When all has been settled by the rains of one winter we will have a garden "as is a garden." This illustration is used merely to show where manure should be placed if it be possible to get it there. A garden so filled in would grow roses and other flowering shrubs that would prove little short of marvelous.

Roses in Lath Houses.

IN CHOOSING roses for planting in lath houses or places somewhat shady, extreme care must be paid to choosing sorts known to be free from mildew. First-class drainage of soil will do much to overcome this fungus and it will prove a pleasant surprise to see how many roses will thrive in summer with little or no sun. A concrete building was erected on a lot adjoining a garden, on the south side. This threw in complete shade a half-dozen roses, and several others were thereafter in partial shade. It was a pleasant surprise to note that in three years but two have been troubled with mildew, not badly however, and only at such times as others in full sun were also affected.

Lady Washington Geraniums.

PELARGONIUMS or "Lady Washington geraniums" are just now coming into their fullest glory, for they like hot weather and drought. If one has a hot, dry place in the garden these heat-loving plants should have it. By nature they are of a very straggly growth, but this may easily be overcome by pinching out the terminal growth of every new branch when but a few inches long. Continue this until the first bud shows and you will get a compact, well-foliaged plant that should yield a bountiful crop of flowers. The colorings of the modern pelargoniums are all that could be desired and cannot be further improved.

Carnation Culture.

NO FLOWER of the garden needs a more finely-pulverized free soil than the carnation. The soil should be very deeply and very thoroughly worked and before the first turning should be covered with a heavy coating of well-rotted manure, so that in the working of the soil it may become so thoroughly incorporated as to lose its identity to the sight of any casual observer. The position for carnations should be in full sun and preparations made for irrigation. Do no sprinkling except an occasional washing off of dust. Carnations need frequent irrigations and light surface cultivations.

The Quest for Orchids.

IN SOME tropical countries orchids grow as luxuriantly and increase as fast as do the mustard plants on the hills of Los Angeles. In spite of this the demand is so great for the more popular species that each year collectors delve farther into the trackless forests. From South America we annually import shiploads of Cattleyas Laelias, Odontoglossums, and Oncidiums and some years a decided shortage occurs. In addition to new collections many are grown from division of large plants and from seeds and hybrids between Cattleyas and Laelias run into the hundreds.

Flowering Fennels.

GIANT flowering fennels, botanically known as Ferula, are popular in some places, though scarce in California. One eight feet high was noted in flower in Hollywood last week and it made an attractive and interesting display. The writer has two species whose fleshy roots were imported from Germany just before the present war commenced. As though grateful to be in the land of the free they have put forth abundantly and even if no flowers appear, the foliage is strikingly handsome. The flowers are far more common in eastern States than on the Pacific Coast.

Giant-flowered Climbers.

THOSE living in the very mildest parts of Southern California should grow a vine of Beaumontia and one of Solandra guttata. There is also a hardier species of Solandra (S. grandiflora) that has white flowers much like those of the Beaumontia. The flowers of all these climbers are of immense size and all are strikingly handsome when in bloom. The two first-named will not survive ordinary frosts, much less severe ones. Very light frosts will scarcely damage them.

Feed for Flowers.

WATCH garden plants that are coming in bud and give them some plant food. Hydrangeas are among the most greedy of plants and will absorb an almost unbelievable amount of food just previous to flowering. Shasta daisies give a heavy crop of flowers during the warmest months—June, July and August—and now is a good time to feed up to vigorous growth.

Pruning Acacias.

IF YOU have acacias unpruned that need pruning do the work at once. You will relieve them of a heavy crop of seed pods and all the energy will go to make new growth, for this is the growing season for all acacias. If you wait much longer the new growth will appear and with it the flower buds for next spring's flowers. If this growth is cut away you need expect few flowers next year.

Summer Annuals.

AREAS of garden soil now bare should be sown or planted with annuals that will give a summer crop of flowers. If in a shaded or half-shaded position you may grow California wild flowers that would scarcely do well in an open position. Although it is the middle of May and nearly all spring wild flowers are fading the writer is just sowing a mixture of native annuals in a shaded position. With a loose soil and a good supply of water they should rival the crops of the rainy season.

Carnations for Winter.

THOSE who have planted young carnations this spring should keep them pinched back all summer and not allow them to bloom until the cool days of autumn. By constantly cutting them back you may easily train the little plants into round, bushy heads that during the coming winter should produce an abundant crop of blossoms.

Raising Turkeys with Free Range.

By M. M. Stearns.

HOW TO DO IT.

TURKEYS that can range as they please, month in and month out, are usually strong, healthy birds. The problem of raising them successfully is entirely different, and not quite as difficult as that of raising them in confinement.

Turkeys that have range can roost in the open. Their life is not unlike the existence that they would lead in an absolutely wild state, and it is not necessary to have them under a roof from one end of the year to the other. Sometimes, however, it is advantageous to have a dry, roomy poultry-house or shed where they may be shut in during particularly inclement weather.

Roosting poles for unhoused turkeys should be placed from four to six or even eight feet from the ground, the higher the better. Good stout poles, two or three inches in diameter, strongly supported, and of any desired length, constitute the entire equipment. It is usually advisable to locate them in some more or less sheltered spot, as in the lee of a barn or other large building, Care must be taken, however, to see that they are not placed where they will be subjected to recurring eddies of wind or the drip of water from trees or eaves.

Even when turkeys are ranging for their living it is impossible to take too great precautions against poultry parasites; consequently the roosting poles should be painted occasionally with coal oil to keep away mites, and once in a while, particularly in summer weather, the birds should be caught (if the flock is not too large to make this impracticable) and dusted with buhach or some other insect powder.

To induce the turkeys to roost on the poles provided they may be fed a light grain ration in the neighborhood of the roosts just before roosting time. After they once become accustomed to the roosting poles, they are not likely to leave them for other perches. It is far better to have the birds use the poles provided, which can be kerosened regularly and otherwise looked after, than to have them roost on trees or ridge poles, where they cannot even be caught if desired.

In getting a start with turkeys that are to be given free range, the same rules are to be observed that have been previously pointed out in connection with raising turkeys under other conditions. The hens and gobblers should be entirely unrelated, preferably beinge secured from widely-separated localities. The male birds will usually have a determining influence on the color of the offspring, and the females on the size and strength. Accordingly the tom should be well colored, well shaped and exceedingly vigorous, but medium sized, rather than excessively large. The hens should also be well shaped, strong, big boned and heavy.

With ranging turkeys the proportion of hens to gobblers may be somewhat increased. Eight or ten hens to a single male will usually give good results, when the birds are not interfered with.

Ranging turkeys not infrequently have to be yarded out in place of being yarded in. During the dry summer months they search indefatigably for green stuffs, and if they can find their way into any kitchen garden will gobble down tender lettuce leaves and other truck at a surprising rate. Only where the birds have a chance to range over fields of alfalfa or other abundant crops can they be counted on to do relatively little damage.

A very good plan is to have a single poultry yard of good dimensions, into which the turkey flock can be driven at night. Turkeys can easily be driven from place to place with a little care, and if regularly driven within the inclosure will soon learn to find their way into the turkey corral at sundown of their own accord. The roosting poles may be placed inside the corral, and in this way the birds will to some extent be protected from coyotes and other wild enemies.

When the birds are yarded for the night in this manner they should be let out early in the morning, as much of their foraging is done soon after daylight. The birds will rarely fly over a six or even a four-foot fence if the edge of the wire is inconspicuous. They are far more likely to fly out of a corral if the fence is topped with a rail or a board of any kind; also they are apt to use any such rail or board for a roost.

As the breeding season approaches nests should be placed here and there in out-of-the-way places. Half-barrels braced between a couple of stones make ideal turkey nests. A-coops, like those ordinarily used over brooding hens, also make excellent shelters. Since turkey hens commence to lay in the middle of the rainy season, these shelters are apt to prove invaluable, first in protecting the eggs, and later the hens themselves. Care must be taken to put them where the ranging hens will be sure to find them. And they should not be visited too often. No nest eggs should be placed in them. After a hen has begun to lay in one of the nests the eggs should not be disturbed, as turkey hens on range show a tendency to revert to their wild instincts, and not infrequently abandon a nest that has been tampered with after a part of a clutch has been laid.

When a hen steals her nest in some unprotected place, it is advisable to put some kind of shelter—as half a packing box, sawed in two, or an A-coop—over it. This should be done without disturbing the eggs and with as little interference with the surroundings as possible. After a turkey hen has been setting for a week or two she will not, ordinarily, abandon her nest. Consequently it is better to wait until the incubation is well under way before attempting any measures to safeguard the nest from vermin. Halfway through the hatch the eggs may be taken from the nest and the ground under it thoroughly sprayed with kerosene or some good lice killer. Above this a good thick nest of clean thick straw should be spread and the eggs replaced in it. Care must be taken to see that the eggs cannot in any way come in direct contact with the lice killer or coal oil, as this will usually prevent their hatching. A turkey hen sitting on a nest thus treated will usually be comparatively free from lice when the hatch comes off, and the poults will have a correspondingly better chance.

An added precaution against vermin is to catch the turkey hen just before the hatch comes off and dust her thoroughly with insect powder. She should be caught when she is off the nest, as a turkey hen may break half the eggs in the clutch if scared while on the nest.

After the brood is hatched out the turkey mother will take entire charge of her poults, and will usually fare better if left severely alone. About the only sensible precautions that can be taken are occasional repetitions of the dusting with insect powder and a single feed at night.

By giving one meal a day to the brood the ration picked up on a range is amplified and the little ones are sent to bed with their crops bulging satisfactorily. Also the single feed prevents both poults and mother turkey from getting too wild, which usually proves a decided advantage.

Hard-boiled eggs, chopped fine with onion tops, make the best possible food for small ranging poults, but a number of substitutes mentioned in previous articles are almost as good.

When the poults are a month or six weeks old, the evening feed may be changed to one of grain—cracked wheat or hulled oats being especially good. Poults on range may be fed grain safely much sooner than poults raised in brooder coops.

As the young birds grow more and more grain can be added to the single evening feed. The turks will count on this, and to some extent will regulate their own food supply accordingly. They will invariably be on hand at the usual place at the usual time, and will become more and more tame as the months go by. After they have developed the red wattles of half-grown birds the evening feed may consist of whole grain exclusively, corn predominating.

As market time approaches no better evening feed can be given than the old Rhode Island combination of whole corn and oats.

It is not necessary to feed any beef scrap or its equivalent to ranging turkeys, as they will procure this element of their ration themselves through the inexhaustible supply of worms and insects.

In very dry localities, where no ordinary green feed is procurable during the late months of summer, a patch of clover or alfalfa should be kept growing for the turkeys to pick over. In case it is not desired to fence this away from the birds and feed the clippings green to them, the roots may be protected by putting frames covered with chicken wire across it. If one-inch mesh wire is used and the ffames are an inch from the ground, the turkeys will range over them and pick off the green as it grows without being able to damage the roots.

Turkeys will ordinarily do better on high ground than on a flat valley floor. Windy hillsides make ideal ranging grounds for turkey flocks.

Another Revelation.

WHAT THE MUSIC MASTER TAUGHT HIS SENSITIVE PUPIL.

By Faith Holmes Hyers.

"Schubert knew love, madame, and you must put love into his music. Pretend that I am your lover and sing from your heart." Caressingly the master's fluent fingers played the opening bars of the seductive serenade. On the first pulse of the fifth measure a rich full voice took up the melody. With every cadence the dramatic quality gained something in freedom and power till the pleading cry, "Dearest, come to me," rose in an ecstacy of longing.

The professor's startled eyes turned to the singer, while the fingers mechanically continued the accompaniment with its haunting reminder of the melody. The woman standing before him seemed the incarnation of the song itself. Her outstretched arms joined her pleading voice in invitation; the depth of her eyes spoke of a well-spring of love. The sudden presumptuous thought that she was singing to him, not for him, leaped to a certainty in the master's mind, even while his subconscious self took note of her charm. The color that came and went in her cheeks fascinated him; the soft gold braid wound around her head made him think of a crown; the lines of her figure pleased his nice sense of proportion; the soft rose and gray of her gown appealed to his aesthetic delight in tone color.

The beautiful voice took up the second verse and the accompaniment blindly followed the singer, though the master's eyes never left the face of his pupil. As the last words, "Come and bless me here," trembled away in a soft sighing breath, the man rose and went to the woman. He took her hands and held them close in his.

"There is but one master that could teach you to sing like that—it is love—is it not so, madame? As for me, I have loved you since you came for the first lesson, but you spoke always of the kind husband who paid for the lessons and I thought you loved none but him."

"My husband is kind and good," replied the woman, "but he knows nothing of music and the finer arts, and to me music is life. Ah! but you are so wonderful! you have taught me to feel love, to express love through music. To what heights could we not attain together? You to put your great thoughts in music, and I to sing them to the world?"

"Such happiness would be heaven on earth, madame. How could fate have been so cruel as to permit you to marry before we met? I have waited always for you, my beloved; why did you not wait for me? But, ah! you suffer enough without my reproaches. My own grief I can bear, but how can I endure that you should suffer? Come, sit here and rest. You must not weep; you have need to remember the voice."

"No, no, I shall not weep, but it is too much. How can I pretend to love my husband when my heart is with you? Why should I go on living a lie? We are made for each other, you and I. Let us defy fate and be happy."

"For me that is easy," replied the man, "but I must think first of you. Your sensitive temperament would suffer from the rude thoughts of a coarse world. The cruelty of a divorce court would kill you. No, no, there must be some other way. The music has brought us this problem, perhaps in music we shall find the solution. Let me play to you and perhaps the answer will come."

The master seated himself at the grand piano and strange weird chords full of dissonance crashed out in rapid progression. Out of the turmoil rose a melody of piercing sweetness, and the woman crouching in her chair knew he was telling of his love for her. She studied the profile turned toward her. She noted the delicately-cut nostrils, the deep-set eyes and the sensuous mouth; she observed that the chin was less prominent than her husband's and she liked it better so. Her glance fell to the slender artistic hands making their way so skillfully among the black and white keys, and she thought of the plump blunt fingers of her husband that had never touched a piano. Then her heart smoke her a little at the thought of the work those same blunt hands had done for her and the generous gifts they had brought her.

The melody was lost again in a searching improvisation that seemed to question and find no answer. The listening woman grew restless and rose from her chair. She wandered about the well-furnished studio and looked with new interest at the pictures which were artistically framed, and hung to best advantage. There were paintings and sketches with the artist's word of greeting to the master; there were photographs of famous people, friends of the musician. The room breathed of a rare and talented personality.

A sudden rush of tenderness filled the heart of the waiting woman as she picked up the violin which had brought the master his first fame. She tucked it under her chin and lightly touched the strings. The man at the piano played on, seemingly oblivious of her presence. The theme was growing clear again, but the melody that rose above the harmonic background contained no hint of passion. Pure, sweet, with a sacred aloofness from human weakness, it brought a strange calm to the troubled heart of the woman. She sank into a deep leather rocker and gave herself up to the message of the music. She knew that the master had solved the problem and that she would abide by his decision.

A spiritual exaltation lifted her to a mountaintop of vision where she looked down on the affairs of men, recognizing good and evil and glimpsing the span of earthly life as a mere dot in the vast circle of existence. The sacred beauty of the melody melted into a transitional phrase and a tenor voice took up the refrain:

"Praying that God may e'er keep thee
As pure and fair as now."

At the last words the master turned to see his pupil standing beside him with transfigured face:

"Yes, yes, I understand, my wonderful master. Schubert inspired love and you taught its expression, but Schumann revealed purity and you made me see the beauty of renunciation. Adieu, my master, adieu!"

The Past Forgotten.

Jeff De Angelis met a New York newspaper man. "Do you remember," asked the newspaper man, "one time while you were playing in a Middle Western city you offered $10 for the best original verse for your 'Women' song?"

"I do," replied the comedian.

"I won that ten."

According to the laws of fiction, Mr. De Angelis should have said: "I've been looking for you for years. Here's $1000 as a retainer. I want you to write me a comic opera." But he didn't. What he did say was:

"Well, that's so long ago I guess we can be good friends, nevertheless."—[Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Quality of Imported Table Poultry.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

WELL DONE.

TABLE poultry on the hoof to stand the journey from the Mississippi Valley must necessarily be in a good state of health and of quality, or else its transportation over so great a distance would not be profitable. What we have seen of it averages very well, the stock being vigorous, well grown and up to grade. That it is well handled, with due respect to sanitary conditions, is clearly demonstrated by the following extract from a letter by the Secretary of the San Francisco Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals:

"During the fall and winter months there are several cars a week received here from the Middle West, but each shipment is accompanied by a man, or men, whose duty it is to feed and water the fowl and take proper care of them. Our officers inspect the cars at frequent intervals, but seldom find anything to warrant their interference. During transit a number of chickens invariably die from various causes and the men are instructed to remove at once the bodies of the dead fowl. Sometimes they neglect to do this, and then a reprimand from our officers is in order.

"The chickens represent a considerable cash value and the poultry companies here will not accept them unless they are healthy and in proper condition. The cars are unloaded immediately upon arriving, unless (as sometimes happens) they reach here on Saturday, in which case they remain over Sunday on the tracks, but we have seen to it that the man in charge waters and feeds the chickens until they are turned over to the purchasers. It is very seldom that we find any of the compartments overcrowded.

"I may remark in passing that we probably have here one of the most modern and sanitary wholesale poultry establishments in the country, which has just been completed, and to whom most of the chickens are consigned."

We sometimes wonder if this stock does not average better in quality than that usually offered by the average rancher in this market? And if so, does it not afford a reason for the invasion of our home markets with this foreign product? To supply home consumption quality must be added to quantity. This, irrespective of other economic and commercial reasons that may be involved in the problem, such as prices realized and cost of local production.

Why Import Table Poultry?

All breeds and varieties of poultry produce eggs; likewise they also are good to eat, the values in either case being merely a matter of degree. This condition will explain why some are designated as "egg breeds," others as "general purpose" fowls, and still others as meat varieties. Often these economic considerations cross each other, a so-called general-purpose fowl (Rocks, Wyandottes, Reds, etc.,) being quite as prolific in eggs as the so-called egg breeds (Leghorns, Campines, etc.,) but one hardly ever hears of the latter being classed as meat breeds. And since we import large quantities of table fowl, both on the hoof and in cold storage, it has often been a matter of speculation why California breeders do not grow more of the heavier breeds in place of the Mediterranean class, which largely predominates in this State. Are we to understand that a Leghorn is a larger source of profit than a Rock or Wyandotte producing an equal quantity of hen fruit? Does the larger consumption of feed by the latter more than offset the increase of price received for the birds sold for meat purposes? It would seem that such is the case, but with a constantly increasing number of Leghorns, will there not come a time when the meat breeds will command wider attention from market poultrymen? And if the "dual purpose" bird produces as well as the single-purpose specimen, will it then become numerically as strong in California? What have the Rock, Rhode Island Red and Wyandotte breeders to say to this question? Of course, it goes without saying that our poultrymen should be able to supply the home market for table fowl; but what are the factors that prevent their doing so?

THE POULTRY BUILDING

Of the Department of Live Stock of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition prior to the completion of the outside runways and the seeding of the grass plots. In this building are housed the 600 hens engaged in the International Egg-Laying Contest, about 1000 pigeons of different varieties, a number of pens of fancy poultry and three pairs of as many different varieties of the Japanese long-tailed fowl. Adjacent to this building will be shown an exhibition of water fowl.

Present Exhibits at the Panama-Pacific.

Just now the interest in poultry at the Panama-Pacific Exposition centers principally on the egg-laying contest, though there are other features quite as alluring, and, to the person on the grounds, equally attractive. The poultry building proper is quite a structure, being 205x157 feet; the roof overhangs the runways and projects about four feet. In this building there are also located a large number of pigeons of different varieties; about fifteen pens of different varieties of poultry bred for the fancy; about ten pens of Bantams of different varieties; four pens of pheasants of different varieties; one pen containing the females of the Japanese long-tailed birds, the males of which are installed in showcases in the main section of the building. High over the door at the east entrance to the building is a specially constructed pen containing racing homing pigeons. These are young birds which will be placed in training for long-distance races this fall.

While the poultry building is near the extreme west end of the grounds and far removed from the great exhibit palaces, it is one of the attractive features of the exposition. It is constantly thronged with visitors who are directly interested in the birds, the automatic feeders, the trap nests, the scratch feed and the dry-mash mixtures, the oat sprout apparatus with ten trays, and the whole building is so arranged and managed as to furnish valuable object lessons to those who are now engaged in the poultry business or those who expect to enter it.

Each pen in the egg-laying contest is numbered and has a placard on the door giving the name of the owner, together with the name of the variety contained in the pen.

The White-Faced Black Spanish Bantam.

In a somewhat lengthy article James Garrow writes entertainingly and instructively of the White-faced Black Spanish fowl, of which breed Southern California has a flock that for quality in type of breed and fine plumage, head and leg points, stands supreme in both the American and the English fancy. The one paragraph in Mr. Garrow's article that possesses special interest, calls attention to the introduction of a strain of White-faced Black Spanish bantams, something quite new to the poultry fraternity. "Spanish Bantams," says our authority, "only require to be better known to gain popularity. They are now to be had of a small size and carrying a fair amount of white. These little dwarfs should be most interesting, and are more easily handled than the larger members of the breed." Parenthetically, we may remark while on the subject of White Spanish that artist Franklane L. Sewall has recently portrayed a fine pen of R. A. Rowan's birds, illustrations of which are now appearing in the poultry papers in both England and America.

Bread and Cheese for Bantams.

Breeders of Campines, Malines, and other French and Belgium varieties will be interested to learn that the poultry industry—what there is left of it—in Belgium is being prosecuted under difficulties, and that for the want of cereal foods in any form, a fancier here and there is sustaining his birds on bread and cheese, as witness the following correspondence appearing in a late issue of the Feathered World:

"There is no poultry food left in Belgium, as grain can no longer be procured, and it is strictly forbidden to give it to fowls. Any birds that the peasants still have share the pigs' food; the supply of maize is almost entirely exhausted. Then the Germans requisition the birds by the hundred, demanding 600 fowls from each little village. They give a good price for them, and as food is exhausted, the peasants may just as well get rid of them advantageously. There will be much to do to restock the country after the war.

"My own Bantams are still in their little wired-in enclosure. They have bread for breakfast, bread for dinner, and cheese at night. It is absolutely forbidden to give any preparation of flour to the animals. All grain in the possession of the inhabitants has to be delivered to the authorities. The penalty for giving cheese to fowls would, I expect, be two years at least in a fortress, and by giving bread I am liable to be very heavily fined.

"It is really dangerous to keep any birds, for besides the punishments above mentioned, the animals themselves would certainly be confiscated."

American Poultry Association Officers.

The mail ballot of the American Poultry Association resulted in the election of the following officers: President, E. E. Richards, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; first vice-president, A. A. Peters, Denver, Col.; second vice-president, Joseph Russell, Toronto, Canada; secretary, S. T. Campbell, Mansfield, O.

The present treasurer, U. R. Fishel, holds over. Of these, the two chief executive officers, viz., Messrs. Richards and Campbell, are good friends of the Pacific Coast, and may be depended on to do their utmost to bring out a strong delegation to the annual meeting of the organization in San Francisco next November; they will also see to it that the members of the association are strongly in evidence with splendid entries at the International Poultry Show, which will be in full swing at the same time.

Not to Blame.

A large map was spread upon the wall and the teacher was instructing the class in geography.

"Horace," said she to a small pupil, "when you stand in Europe facing the north you have on your right hand the great continent of Asia. What have you on your left hand?"

"A wart," replied Horace, "but I can't help it, teacher."—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Secretary of Navy Hopes for Disarmament.

By Edward Marshall.

AMERICA WILL LEAD.

"WOULD international disarmament be desirable?" I asked.

"Undoubtedly," was the reply. "The world must come to it."

I was not talking with a clergyman, but with the Secretary of the United States Navy, who, a few moments earlier, had expressed elation because he had succeeded in inducing Congress to make large appropriations for new submarines.

"War must end," said he. "Every humane instinct certainly demands it, but the demand of common sense is louder than that of humane instincts. It always is."

"Personally I hate war. I hate its destruction of fatherhood, orphan-making, widow-making. I should be glad to see the time arrive when neither armed sailors nor soldiers would be required anywhere in the world. I hope that when this present war shall end so great will be the deep impression left upon humanity that war never will come again.

"While I am the Secretary of the United States Navy I shall try to stick tight to my job, to understand it and to perform its duties. But I hope for a great conference of the experts of the world called for the purpose of devising ways and means for making this war final—ways for the achievement of disarmament.

"These men, experts at making war, should also be expert at keeping peace. When the armies and the navies of the world become the world's police and not the world's oppressors, then humanity will have accomplished perhaps the greatest step toward the fulfillment of its destiny.

"Suppose the nations now at war had expended the vast sums which they have spent on surplus armament and which they now are spending upon war on almost any peaceful project of general improvement.

What the War's Cost Might Have Done.

"This war and the preparedness which went before it and led up to it will cost far more than would have been the cost of making every road, indeed, every by-path in Europe a paved and perfect way. It will cost enough to harness every water power so that 10,000 mills might turn and so that every resident of Europe, no matter of what station, might have electric light in every room of his abode.

"When Edison toured Europe a few years ago he noted a most interesting thing. In those Swiss neighborhoods within the sphere of influence of electric lighting plants he found few stupid faces, he found only slight illiteracy and very high intelligence and happiness.

"In those valleys where electric light had not yet penetrated he found humanity at the old average, much lower than the new.

"Such was the beneficent influence of the electric light and its stimulus to study and more extended social activity, that even faces of the residents in rural neighborhoods affected by the longer living day made possible by electric light were brighter and gave evidence of greater happiness than those in the neighborhoods where bad lighting sent the people early to their beds, or, at least, kept them from evening reading, study and social intercourse.

Two Billions Every Year for War.

"Well, before it ends this war will cost a sum so vast that, expended not upon destruction, but upon construction, it might have harnessed millions of horse power in now wasting cataracts and given the intelligence stimulating light to really great populations.

"The harnessed waterfalls, too, would furnish more than light—they would furnish electric energy with which to enormously enhance industry and its useful product.

"In other words, the incredible expenditures of this war, if put into useful rather than destructive enterprise, would have made for such prosperity and progress as the world never has known.

"War has been the greedy beast which has robbed humanity of more than any other inefficiency has taken from it. We call ourselves a peaceful nation, here in the United States, yet nearly one-half of the total revenues of the nation are devoted to the payment for past wars or military and naval expenditure which properly may be classed as preparation for the wars to come.

HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

"And our expenditures are small compared to those of England. The latest figures compiled in the Navy Department show the total war budgets of the world, that is, army and navy expenditures, for 1913-14 to be $2,159,500,000, as follows:

1913-14.	Great Britain	$448,000,000
1914.	Russia	440,000,000
1913.	France	311,000,000
1913.	Germany	294,000,000
1913-14.	United States	235,000,000
1914.	Italy	134,000,000
1913.	Austria-Hungary	124,000,000
1913-14.	Japan	95,500,000
1914.	Turkey	40,000,000
1914.	Spain	38,000,000
		$2,159,500,000

"Does that surprise you? It is true; and also it is true that unless some intelligent agreement to reduce, or, at least, to limit armament is reached by the nations of the world, and if the United States finds it continually necessary to keep armed in a way at all comparable to the armament of its possible if improbable adversaries in conflict, we shall find that we scarcely have begun upon expenditure.

"Happily, we do not pretend to keep prepared for war as one of the great powers. We have a powerful navy, and the last Congress made larger appropriations for its increase than those made by any previous Congress in the history of the nation. It made appropriations toward the construction of five new dreadnaughts, twelve new destroyers and twenty-six new submarines.

"This seems like progress. It stirs the blood.

"But when we stop to think that a dreadnaught costs $15,000,000 and that this Congress has authorized the construction of five such vessels, such an appropriation implying the expenditure of many more millions for personnel, upkeep and operation, and when we stop to think that every dollar of these millions—surely far more than a hundred in the end—must come out of the pockets of our taxpayers, we find the blood chilled, instead.

"What might not these hundred millions do for good roads, for the development of our own water powers and lighting and manufacturing? What might they not do for the cause of education?

We Must Keep Pace with Others.

"Our naval appropriation bill provides for more than $147,000,000 for this year. If it is costing us this sum now when our navy is kept upon what the world has come to consider a modest basis, imagine what our expenditure would aggregate in dollars and would represent in human and ethical waste if we should attempt to take a place as one of the really great military powers! Suppose we entered into competition with, for instance, England and Germany!

"And it must be remembered that the cost goes far beyond the bills incurred for the mere building of the ships. The ships must be equipped with armament and manifold accessories of which the layman scarcely knows the names and does not guess the cost.

"For example, as the Secretary of the United States Navy, I made a contract the other day for a single torpedo net to cost $75,000.

"When that and other torpedo nets have been provided and supplied to our great naval ships, it probably will develop that some means of circumventing them has been devised by the torpedo-makers, rendering them obsolete, and we shall need to spend new thousands in order to meet that and offset it.

"Such is the endless nature of the process of military preparedness.

"The submarine is the great problem of naval construction today. Many years after the vivid imagination of Jules Verne pictured for the novel reader what he thought to be the possibilities of such uncanny craft they have actually come into existence as the most terrifying of destructive agents.

The Problem of the Submarine.

"As delicate as Swiss watches in their construction, engineers confess that we scarcely have passed the threshold of learning concerning them.

"We do not know how to build them perfectly. No absolutely satisfactory battery or engine yet has been devised to furnish them with motive power. All the warring nations of Europe have been working along practically identical lines with us in submarine construction.

Submarine Construction.

"Now, France is said to be ready to go back from the Diesel oil engine to the old steam engine.

"The lead batteries used by all the nations in their submarines are accompanied by an element of danger, for if salt water gets to them chlorine gas is the result, and that will kill the crews.

"The only means by which the commander of a submerged submarine may see the surface of the water is through the periscope, and that is unsatisfactory.

"These things show that with this weapon of destruction the world is in a definitely experimental stage. But that is true of practically everything in warfare. Experimentation is continually necessary and is infinitely costly.

"So far as we know, now, the United States will in some sense be in the lead in submarine navigation when the authorizations of this Congress have been fulfilled. It appropriated money for the construction of three sea-going submarines. To the best of my knowledge no other nation yet has undertaken the construction of under-water vessels of this type.

"These amazing little ships will have a speed of from twenty to twenty-three knots when traveling upon the surface, and thus they will be able to keep up with the surface fleet when cruising. Constructors and engineers now are trying to determine what will be the best type of engines for them, and already they have been named 'dreadnaught submarines.'

Edison at Work on War Problems.

"The United States is fortunate in having among its citizens the greatest of inventive geniuses. Thomas A. Edison is now concentrating his incomparable mind upon the problem of making these new submarines the most effective vessels ever known.

"It was clear enough that certain problems must be solved before the submarine could be developed into the efficient agent which, obviously, it might be, and with a view to arousing his interest in the subject I invited him to go with me to the Brooklyn navy yard upon a visit of investigation.

"The great inventor never before had been on board of either a dreadnaught or a submarine, and it was an inspiration to observe his interest. Once having induced him to make the visit, it was actually difficult to get him to bring it to an end.

"The Edison battery already had been tested in the navy yard and experts had declared their belief that in it we had the great desideratum—a battery free from chlorine gas danger. No accidents from that source have happened in our navy, but we are aware of peril. If we must have submarines, I am delighted that Edison should have been willing to begin study of the problem

"I have ordered the installation of an Edison battery in one of our old submarines and in one of our newest under-water vessels, so that he may test it out as rapidly as possible.

"The war has shown the vast importance of the under-water craft, and because of this I recommended to Congress that after other appropriations had been made as many as possible of these vessels should be added.

To Have Three Greatest Submarines.

"The result was the appropriation of money for twenty-six, including the three greatest ever built, which I have mentioned, drooping lids were expressionless, and there was a heaviness about the mouth that was unpleasant. Kent observed this latter feature and his distrust grew.

"Audre, I wish to see her," he demanded, taking a step forward.

"Audre," repeated the man with lifted brows. He smiled suavely. "I presume you mean my wife."

Kent stared at him. "Your wife!" he echoed.

The man regarded the tips of his well-manicured fingers. "She never mentioned the fact that she had a husband?" he inquired pleasantly. "Strange," he mused.

"What's your game?" Kent broke in.

The man's expression changed. He watched Kent through narrowed lids and his voice lost its purring pleasantness. "I could publish a story," he said slowly, "that, I think I am safe in saying, would ruin your career."

Kent was dazed for a moment, then he suddenly whitened under the other's slow stare. An ugly light leaped into his eyes, then died down again. When he finally spoke, his voice was quiet, but he gripped the back of a chair with one hand until the muscles of his arm were like whipcords. "My call on your wife," he said slowly, "if you're referring to last night, was purely professional."

"It would be difficult to convince a jury that your interest in my wife is purely professional," returned the man with a disagreeable smile.

Kent slowly measured him from head to foot. "How much do you want?" he asked.

"Twenty thousand," answered the man promptly.

In a blind flash of rage, Kent took a quick step forward, his hands clenched; then as suddenly they fell to his sides. He fumbled in his pocket and drew out a cigar. With insolent deliberation he bit off the end of it, and lit it. At the door he turned. "I'll see you in hell first," he said slowly.

The man watched him go, but made no effort to stop him. Kent, however, did not feel the confidence of his manner—he knew that he faced ruin. "Twenty thousand!" he muttered to himself. "If I could give it, they'd only bleed me for more." Already he pictured the sensational lines of the newspapers, and he gave a shudder of disgust.

That night, as he lay for hours staring into the darkness, he saw his practice and his reputation suddenly swept from him. When, toward morning, he fell asleep, it was to dream a dream from which he awoke with a start of horror. He seemed to be swinging along joyously in the bright sunlight when suddenly the ground beneath him gave way. He found himself sinking into black mire; his struggles were useless; he was being slowly sucked under. Then someone came to him—it was Audre—and he took her hand and drew himself to safety. As he started away, he heard her call to him. He turned to see her slowly sink as he had done a moment before. Then he awoke. He sprang to his feet and tried to shake off the long, hideous night, but the dream clung to him.

During the next day that dragged slowly by, he waited for he knew not what. He started nervously at each ring of the telephone. Finally, it was Audre's voice that came to him over the wire.

"Kent, it is I, Audre," she said.

"Yes," he answered dully.

"You—you do not believe that I——" her voice faltered.

"No," he lied.

"If you come to me now, I will see you alone." She paused, and he heard her catch her breath sharply. "Can you trust me?"

He went and found her, as she said—alone. She appeared older than he had ever seen her. She was quite pale, and there was a drawn look about her mouth; but the gray eyes she lifted to his were luminous with a light he had never seen there before.

"Don't laugh," she whispered; "but I prayed that you might believe in me." She checked him as he started to speak. Her eyes hardened. "You're going to be let alone," she went on shortly, "I saw to that; I told them I'd quit them for good and all if they didn't. Von Dernberg would have killed me if he'd dared; but I'm too valuable to lose," she added with a bitter little laugh.

He passed his hand over his forehead. "I—I don't know how to thank you," he began.

She made a quick little gesture as though he had hurt her. "Ah, don't thank me!" she cried.

There was a pause. Kent drew a deep breath. "Why—why did you do it, Audre?" he asked finally. His heart almost stopped beating for fear of what her answer might be.

"Why?" She shrugged her shoulders. "Just a decent instinct, I suppose." She spoke carelessly, and he was satisfied. Her gray eyes looked suddenly straight into his, and she smiled as she held out her hand. "It's good-by this time," she said.

Kent half resented her manner; it was the charming, detached air with which one would dismiss any chance acquaintance, and as he took her hand, there was something boyish in his sudden, hurt dignity. Audre looked away abruptly and caught her lip between her teeth; but when at the door he hesitated and turned, she was looking after him with a set little smile. He bowed stiffly and left without a backward glance.

That night he was called to the telephone.

"Hello—Kent?" came Blake's voice.

"Yes."

"Read tonight's paper?"

"No—not yet, why?"

Blake's hearty laugh rang over the wire. "I thought perhaps you'd be interested to hear that Peter Coleman passed away on board his yacht the other day; and, as no will can be found, the millions will go to his son, Peter. Good Joke—eh?"

"Yes," said Kent, "it's a good joke."

"Busy tonight?"

"Yes."

"All right, old man"

Kent slowly hung up the receiver. He seated himself before the open fire, lit his pipe, and smoked far into the night.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

By Mabel Herbert Urner.

REBELLION CRUSHED.

MY DEAR Mrs. Curtis: Will you kindly arrange to have your washing done some other day except Tuesday? I think it very unwise for our maids to wash on the same day. Last Tuesday I was down in the laundry and found them laughing and carrying on instead of doing their work. Lately my clothes have been wretchedly washed, and I know it is because your maid spends most of her time talking to Jane. I have spoken to Mr. Thompson, the superintendent, and he says that you can wash on Wednesday, as only two apartments wash on that day. Very truly yours,

BLANCHE M. GORDON.

The insolence! The cool presumption of such a note! Helen's eyes fairly blazed as she read it for the third time. Why should she change her washday! Why should not Mrs. Gordon change hers?

They had been in the house longer than the Gordons, and they had always washed on Tuesday. The sheer impertinence of this woman!

Aquiver with indignation, Helen ran out to the kitchen. Anna was on her knees cleaning the lower part of the ice box.

"Anna, when you first came, I told you to have nothing to do with Gordon's maid! The girl we had before was always running in there and making trouble. I warned you never to go into her kitchen, not even—"

"Why, yes, ma'am, but I ain't never been—"

"You've been carrying on with her in the laundry. Here's a note from Mrs. Gordon complaining about it."

"Me?" slamming the door of the ice box. "It's that boy on the elevator—that's who she's always carryin' on with!"

"Well, hereafter you take your tubs in another part of the laundry, where you can't talk back and forth. Now remember what I've told you."

When Helen left the kitchen, with grim determination she went in to her desk and took out the best note paper for the curt, sarcastic answer her mind was already forming.

"My Dear Mrs. Gordon: I have received your note and am surprised at your request. Since I have always washed on Tuesday, I am afraid I cannot comply with your day. I am afraid I cannot comply with your request—"

No, she had used "request" twice. Wish? Comply with your wish—No, that wasn't strong enough.

Crumpling the corner of the blotter, she strove vainly for another word. Then, impulsively throwing down her pen, she reached for the 'phone. Her impatience demanded the quickest way.

"Hello! Give me Mrs. Gordon's apartment."

"Line's busy," came the answer.

The impulse to 'phone passed as quickly as it had come, and Helen hung back the receiver with a throb of relief that the line had been busy. After all she had better write. Over the 'phone she was always confused and nervous. She could never say what she wanted.

Taking a fresh sheet, she began another note—a more scathing one.

"My Dear Mrs. Gordon: I fail to see why I should change my wash day, since we have been in this house longer than you, and have always washed on Tuesday. Since you object to your maid washing on the same day with mine, you had better arrange to have your washing done on Wednesday.

"Yours very truly,

"HELEN L. CURTIS."

There were two "sinces," one of them should have been "as," but she was too nervous to rewrite it.

"Anna," she swung through the pantry door, "take this note over to Mrs. Gordon. Just hand it in. Now don't say a word to the maid."

With grim exultancy, Helen pictured Mrs. Gordon reading the note. Yet she felt the incident was not closed. Mrs. Gordon's arrogance and obstinacy would drive her to any extreme to gain her point.

What would be her next move? Vaguely troubled and apprehensive, Helen started to put up the new mull curtains in the bedroom. She was running the last curtain on its slender brass rod when Anna announced that the superintendent wanted to see her.

"Mr. Thompson? Oh, bring him right in here."

Instantly Helen knew why he had come, but she kept on with her work, trying to seem unconcerned. Mr. Thompson, plainly embarrassed, stood by the door, awkwardly fingering his watch chain.

"H-hum, Mrs. Curtis, Mrs. Gordon just spoke to me about your wash day. When the maids get down there together it seems they do more talking than work, and Mrs. Gordon thinks you'd better not wash on the same day. Now if Wednesday would suit you as well—"

"I'm afraid it wouldn't, Mr. Thompson. I believe we've been here longer than the Gordons—perhaps Mrs. Gordon would like to change her day."

"Yes, I—that's what I suggested, but she says her work's so arranged that her maid couldn't wash on Wednesday."

Helen's fingers trembled as she pushed along the gathers to even the curtain on the rod, but her voice was frigid.

"That's unfortunate, for Wednesday would be quite as inconvenient for me."

"I—well, it's just this way," nervously twisting his watch chain. "Mrs. Gordon is a—well, a somewhat peculiar tenant. She's made more complaints to the agents about the heat and service here than anybody in the house, and I—I thought if you could arrange—"

"Mr. Thompson, I don't want to make things difficult for you, but I happen to know that Mrs. Gordon has said some very unkind things about me. She told a number of people in the house that I— Oh, well, there's no use going into that now, but after the insolent note she sent me this morning, I don't think I care to change my day."

Mr. Thompson did not press the matter further, but when he had gone Helen felt almost guilty. She knew his position was most difficult, yet why should she upset the whole schedule of her housework just to humor an unreasonable tenant—and one who had been insolent to her?

With all her ability to worry, Helen worried over this. It would have been more tactful to have obliged the superintendent, for in so many ways he could contribute to their comfort. Yet the thought of letting Mrs. Gordon dictate the day on which she should wash was intolerable.

That evening Warren came home tired and preoccupied, and Helen decided not to speak of Mrs. Gordon's note. This was something that she must fight out alone.

But at dinner Warren startled her by announcing casually:

"Oh, by the way, met the superintendent in the hall as I came in. He said that Gordon woman's kicking like a steer because we've the same wash day. What's the matter," scowling at the empty bread plate, "short on bread?"

Helen rang for more bread and waited tensely for him to go on.

"Jove, she must be a holy terror! He said Gordon was a very decent chap, but that she'd been raising Cain ever since they'd been in the house."

"What—what did he say about the washing?" Helen was recklessly piercing the tablecloth with a fork.

"Oh, he just wanted us to change to Wednesday," indifferently. "He seemed mighty relieved when I said any day would suit us."

"But, Warren, it won't! That shows how underhanded he is! He came up to see me, and I told him we wouldn't change."

"Why not? What in thunder's the difference whether you wash Tuesday or Wednesday?"

"She cleans the silver on Wednesday—that's one reason."

"What's the matter with cleaning the silver on Tuesday?"

"But if she washes on Wednesday that brings the ironing on Thursday—her afternoon off."

"Then let her iron on Friday."

"The clothes can't stay sprinkled so long. Besides that brings the ironing too late in the week. Wait!" Helen flew into the library and came back with Mrs. Gordon's note. "Just read that!" throwing it down by his plate. "Now do you want to let her lord it over us?"

Warren glanced at the note and pushed it away with a derisive shrug.

"I'll wager she's a rip-snorter. Jove I'd hate to have the superintendent's job in this house. It's for him you're changing your wash day—not for her. Can't you see that?"

"But, Warren, I'm not going to change! I'll not let Mrs. Gordon manage my affairs. I'll send the clothes out first."

"All right, send 'em out. Cut off your nose to spite your face, for all I care."

"No," passionately. "I won't send them out! We'll not pay $2 a week more just to humor that woman. We're going to wash on Tuesday. Warren, you must let me run the housework. I don't interfere with your office, and you've no right to dictate about the house."

"I haven't, eh? Who pays the bills?"

Helen's "Oh!" was hardly more than a whisper, but it was more expressive than a volume of words. Warren reddened slightly.

"Well, you'd egg a man on to say anything. It's not the bills. That was pretty raw—I'll take that back. But the rest stands. That Gordon woman's a fine example of what you'd be if you weren't held down with a firm hand. Now we'll have none of that here. No woman on God's earth will ever dictate to me—just remember that. From now on you'll wash on Wednesday, or you'll send the clothes out. All right, leave the table! Go throw yourself on the bed and have hysterics. I don't care a whoop what you do!"

Overcame His Handicap.

Mrs. Codding was having some new window fixtures put up in her home one day, and she stood near by watching the workman.

"Don't you think that you have placed those fixtures too high?" she asked.

The workman was a stolid German and, making no reply whatever, continued to adjust the fixtures.

"Didn't you hear my question?" demanded Mrs. Codding. "How dare you be so rude?"

The German gulped convulsively, and then, in the most gentle of voices replied:

"I haf my mouth full of screws, und I could not shpeak till I svallow some!"—[New York Times.

[illegible] provided for by the previous Congress.

"Men who formerly were engaged as unreasonable enthusiasts for submarines find themselves in every sense justified by what already has occurred abroad, although as a matter of fact, we have had reports from only something like ten of the very large number of such craft included in the navies of the warring nations.

"We don't know what the others are doing. Some may have failed; those that have accomplished most may have done so at great expense, after many misses.

"So far as I have heard no vessel traveling at a speed as great as eighteen knots has been damaged by a submarine. Those which have been assailed successfully, as indicated by reports which have reached us, have been standing still or proceeding at low speed.

"Of course nothing is impossible. Submarine experts declare faith in their ability to eventually design under-water craft capable of matching speed with and sinking the fastest dreadnaughts.

"Chief Naval Constructor David W. Taylor of our service, easily the first man in America and probably the first man in the world in his profession, has been abroad several times for the purpose of studying every phase of naval construction with a view to making dreadnaughts as nearly as possible impervious to submarine attacks.

There is No Last Word in Warfare.

"We hope to take advantage of every new development. Already the war has taught us much, but the greatest lessons will not be open to the student until after the great war is over.

"Most of the ships engaged at the start were built on lines well known to us. Undoubtedly, however, genius has been busy, and it may have been producing novel craft.

"There is no last word in warfare, although the 'last word' often is proclaimed. And that is why there cannot be, without international disarmament, an end to its taxation or a limit to the burdens it may place upon the people's shoulders. There become apparent the most discouraging feature of the great war game and the most striking illustration of its fatuousness.

"Every war teaches new things. The great new thing developed in our Civil War was the ironclad. The battle between the Monitor and Merrimac, in Hampton Roads, was epoch-making for the navies of the world.

"Now, in this war, have come under-water and air craft, teaching as wonderful lessons and likely to cause, at least in naval construction, a revolution as great as that attributable to the fight in those Virginia waters.

"When the European war began, I sent abroad, in addition to our regular naval attaches, various constructors, engineers, airmen and doctors.

"Not much has come from them, as yet, of course; but we have learned that aircraft have rendered surprises in warfare henceforth impossible. The Stonewall Jacksons and the Shermans of the future wars must depend for victories upon other strategy than surprise.

"That is one of the important reasons for what seems to be the leisurely course of this conflict. Decisive battles probably would have been fought before this had it not been for aircraft.

President Wanted to Be a Sailor Boy.

"This administration is immensely interested in the navy. It has been pointed out, but never emphasized, that the President, himself, when a boy, wished to go to Annapolis. I often have thought how different the present situation would be if he had done so and were now captain of the New Jersey instead of captain of the Ship of State."

I asked Secretary Daniels to express himself definitely upon the matter of general disarmament.

"There can be no two opinions among reasonable men upon that subject," he replied. "All law-abiding citizens agree that individual disarmament is to be enforced, and if warlike weapons are undesirable and trouble-makers in the hands of individuals they are exactly the same thing in the hands of nations.

"Not even questions of so-called 'honor' can be adjudicated in an ideal manner by recourse to arms. In the old days high-spirited individuals thought it right to fight duels when individual questions of 'honor' were involved. But even then they first considered arbitration—for each man had his second.

"Men of great eminence have explained of late that questions involving national honor cannot be arbitrated. This is a false position. Such questions always have been arbitrated, and when they have been arbitrated the settlements usually have been more satisfactory to everyone concerned than when they have been settled by a fight.

"Any question can be built into an affair of honor. To deny the availability of arbitration as a means of settling such disagreements is equivalent to explaining that you favor arbitration, but that even though you do, you are aware that it won't work.

All or None Must Disarm.

"To my mind, however, we must admit that general arbitration of international disputes cannot be brought about in this world of great commercial rivalries unless all the great navy nations get together and agree to it. All must agree or none can agree with safety.

"In the movement leading toward such a general agreement the United States of America, by the grace of God free and independent, must be the leaders. Therefore, it seems to me, the course for us to follow is to build a powerful navy, saying, meanwhile, to the other powers which will be watching every rivet as we drive it:

"'We are ready to join you in an agreement to cease this expensive and endless competition. But we can't cease if you don't cease. Cessation will save us and will save you. But we are richer than you are and if you keep on we'll beat you at it. What do you think about it?'

"Only readiness to defend ourselves against any attack will put us in such a position that we will be listened to with respect. If we maintain our readiness the day may come when argument and reason from us may produce desirable results.

"It seems probable that conditions following the European war will be especially favorable to such a move upon our part. Already the fighting nations have spent nearly all they have, soon they will be mortgaging the future.

United States Must Lead.

"When they definitely reach and encroach upon this melancholy period, sentiment will become strong for arbitration and reduction of armament. Indeed, it seems inevitable that it will be too strong to withstand, and I believe it will be the privilege of the United States to take the lead in this progression so essential to the advancement of the world's civilization.

"The naval appropriations in our own country have doubled in a dozen years, and they have increased even more rapidly in other nations. It is a mad rivalry, certain to produce a burden too heavy for any nation to bear. I do not consider that the present war renders impossible an international agreement tending to relieve humanity of this burden; indeed, I believe that it will forward it, rather than retard it.

"This time would be inopportune for a movement upon our part toward the organization of a conference of the powers for the discussion of ways and means for the decrease of armament, but it is my belief that after peace comes America will find its coveted opportunity of initiating a movement for the reduction in the world's fighting machinery without endangering the rights of any people.

"At the launching of the naval vessel Pennsylvania, the message which I delivered as spokesman for the President of the United States was one of peace. It found many echoes in the hearts of our sea fighters. I have learned that the officers in the navy who are keenest to keep the navy up to the highest standard do not wish for war.

"With others I had hugged to my bosom the delusion that if we were continually ready with a great navy and a worthy army we thereby would be safeguarding against war. I considered 'preparedness' insurance.

"I was not alone in this delusion. When Dr. Gatling, a native of North Carolina, reached his seventieth birthday, I asked him if he did not feel regret that he had invented a firearm which had been responsible for so many human deaths. He answered that, upon the contrary, he felt elation, because he had so added to the terrors of war that he had made for peace.

Preparation Not Preventive.

"I and many others now see the fallacy of that. We now see that preparation is not prevention.

"War can come and will come, in spite of everything, unless all agree to stop it and give hostages to make doubly sure the execution of this admirable agreement.

"The nations most ready were the nations first to go to war Guns in the hip-pockets make men swagger. Guns in the fortifications and the naval vessels did not prevent this holocaust in Europe.

"An effective measure toward peace would be the readiness of the naval and military departments of the government to enter upon the manufacture of munitions of war. That policy would prevent effective agitation or organization for big preparedness for war upon the part of those who profit through the manufacture of war supplies.

"It has been suspected in some countries that makers of arms and powder, guns and fighting craft, have promoted, for their personal enrichment, steadily-increasing armament and therefore provocation for war. The link between personal enrichment and preparedness should not be permitted to exist in the United States. It could be prevented by government manufacture of all material for war.

"The last Congress authorized government manufacture of all smokeless powder. Government manufacture costs 36 cents a pound; before the government had a powder plant private manufacturers had supplied the government at 80 cents a pound. We have doubled our capacity for government manufacture of torpedoes and considerably reduced the cost.

Should Manufacture Own Munitions.

"I take the position that the government should be in a position to manufacture every war implement and war munition, for two reasons; first, control of and economy in its preparedness, and, second, the elimination of the incentive of dollar-making individuals to urge the nation on toward war.

"Happily, we have had no such scandals in this country as have occurred abroad where great concerns actually have jockeyed for preparation, in order that they might make money out of it, but we must forever guard against the possibility.

"No one glories in this war. Every ruler involved hastens to explain that he was not responsible for its outbreak, accompanying his statement with proofs in the form of blue books, white books, red books, or yellow books. Every chancellory in Europe has made frenzied efforts to shift responsibility. Each declares that the nation which has issued it is fighting to save itself from annihilation.

"That conviction certainly is honest among the men who actually are fighting. We must regard the blood they shed as that of patriots. The man who won't fight for his home is not of the sort which make the best homes. Most of the men now in the field undoubtedly believe that they are battling for their firesides and their household gods.

"So wonderful a thing is love of country that men will quickly sacrifice their all when they feel that it is likely to be trampled on by foemen. War is horrible, but there are things much worse, as, for example, that supineness that would give up home, relinquish freedom and submit to tyranny rather than march into battle.

Place No Faith in Fortifications.

"This war has shown that faith in fortifications is not well grounded. We had been told that those of Belgium and France were indestructible. Millions had been spent for single forts.

"But the impregnable fortification has fallen before the irresistible projectile.

"It seems, therefore, that the only practicable way in which cities like New York, Boston and San Francisco may be defended will prove to be by means of submarines and movable forts. That must tend toward thoughts of world disarmament.

"What would that mean? Nearly one-half cut from the taxation of all civilized peoples.

"If we could turn all the money which we spend on war preparedness into the development of the undeveloped sections of our country, every desert might thereby be changed into a blooming garden-spot. Every man could have his home. Good roads could be constructed in front of every door. Every water power could be developed.

"The most wonderful achievements dreamed of by the prophets of human social progress would come with almost startling speed if we could spend, not to destroy but to build up, the money which we now waste on military preparation.

"This very day a man said to me that I, as Secretary of the United States Navy, ought not to talk that way.

"He was wrong. The greatest of our soldiers, Washington, Grant, Lee, hated war. The thought that soldiers love war is a misconception. The thought that a Secretary of the Navy ought to love war is a misconception. He should not be bloodthirsty, but thoughtful.

"It is his mission to see that our machine is ready as the readiness of the machinery of the other nations may necessitate. We are trying, here, now, to accomplish just that: but we all hate war.

"We have doubled the appropriations to be spent afloat and notably decreased those to be spent ashore. We are spending money not only upon submarines, but on aeroplanes.

"In an abandoned navy yard we have this year organized an efficient air-craft station. Congress has given the navy its first appropriation specifically for aviation—a million dollars—but every dollar of it has been saved in navy-yard economies to build two submarines."

I asked the Secretary to express himself upon the feeling of irritation throughout Europe which seems to have been produced by our neutrality measures.

The European Irritation Against Us.

"It is regrettable," he answered. "Wherever it exists it is based upon a misconception of America's position. Our country is made up of people from all the European nations and should be, as it has demonstrated itself to be, strictly neutral.

"Whatever irritation exists will be dissipated when Europe realizes America's actual sentiment, its sorrow for the horrors of the struggle and its hope that its good offices may be availed of in bringing it to a quick end.

"When I first entered office I hoped that ere I left it the United States might be called in conference by others of the great nations to discuss the end of competition for preparedness for war.

"Such a conference is desirable above all things. It should include the most distinguished admirals, generals and experts in military affairs as well as all the secretaries. Such a personnel probably would accomplish more than one including only laymen, even though they were all statesmen of the highest rank.

"It would be a glorious thing to see these men, trained to fighting, take the lead in a great conference for peace.

"The movement toward this end, which was well under way, has been terribly delayed, but I have not lost hope of its eventual accomplishment."

Make Dollars From Dust.

[Saturday Evening Post:] Save the useless waste! That is the new policy of progressive metal and coal mining managers in the United States; and it is based on the theory that what is useless today may become worth much money tomorrow. Coal screenings, for instance, must be carefully saved in piles, which will be handy for future use when inventors perfect a practical way of getting valuable heat out of them.

A Pennsylvania coal mining company is applying the idea to the extreme. From its anthracite coal mines vast quantities of coal have been shipped to market, but millions of tons of screenings have accumulated for many years. These culm piles were considered to be worthless, and coal ashes and other refuse were dumped on them. At the present time, however, the very small sizes of anthracite, down to a sixteenth of an inch in diameter, can all be sold profitably; so the company is digging out the culm piles and sifting the old waste for salable coal.

The managers know it will not be long before even the flue dust may do good work under boilers and sell at a fair figure; therefore the new culm piles resulting from the present sifting operations have been carefully planned to be handy and in good shape for selling whenever the inventors succeed in making it profitable.

Dust from the chimneys of a copper smelter is not now of much value, as a general rule, because there is no economical way of recovering the copper, zinc, silver and gold in the dust; but great quantities of this fine dust are collected in modern smelters, in an attempt to prevent the smelter fumes from bothering neighboring farmers. The dust is useless and gathers so fast that much money is expended in disposing of it.

A California smelter company has discovered just how much copper, gold and other metals are carried away in flue dust. There is enough to make every ton valuable if somebody could invent an easy way to extract the metals.

The Woman Haters. By Margharite Fisher.

A "MYSTERY" WOMAN.

KENT turned sharply, dodged around a corner, and as a final outburst of wrath, hailed a cab. A few minutes later, curiosity overcoming dignity, he scraped the frost off the tiny pigeonhole window and peered behind him. An eerie chill wavered up his spine—another cab was lumbering up the avenue. When his cab turned a corner, it also turned.

"Great Scott!" groaned Kent, suddenly relaxing against the cushions, "if this keeps up I'll go crazy."

Later, in the presence of big Jimmy Blake and a hearty dinner, the incident faded into the ridiculous. Though secretly a dreamer, it was only the commonplace in which he believed; for the life of Leonard Kent had been, on the whole, that of the ordinary young man sent into the world with a normal amount of brains and good looks. He had worked hard, and, at 30, had arrived at a moderate success by his efforts rather than through any brilliancy. He had built up a steady practice and was recognized as a capable young physician; but there was nothing in his career to distinguish him from a score of others. People invariably liked him, as he had an agreeable manner, and never appeared too clever for their own complacency; but that fate should single him out for the unusual seemed incredible. Yet despite his utter disbelief he found the conviction growing on him that his heretofore well-ordered life was being invaded by a new element, one that he had thought was left out of everyday existence—that of adventure.

If the warmth of big Jimmy Blake's personality banished this conviction into unbelief, it was not long before it was again borne in on him with annoying persistence. He became conscious that someone was looking at him. At first, he resisted the inclination to turn his head, but finally succumbing to it, he encountered the hastily-averted gaze of a small dark man, who was sitting alone at one of the side tables.

"Blake," Kent said, leaning forward and speaking in a rapid undertone, "I've felt for some time that I've been followed. At first, I thought it was my imagination; but, man, my footsteps are being dogged. It's an outrage. I won't stand it!" He thumped the table defiantly.

Blake laughed. "Why on earth should anyone follow you? You haven't yet even killed a patient. Nervousness. Have a drink," he added brusquely, as he studied his friend.

Kent started a hot denial, but changed his mind. "Maybe that's it," he agreed. They lit their cigars in silence. Kent frowned at the curling smoke wreaths.

"Did you ever hear of Peter Coleman?" he asked finally.

"Peter Coleman—Peter Coleman," repeated the other vaguely. "Oh, yes, to be sure—he ran off with Goldie Daniels. She certainly could dance," he added with a reminiscent chuckle.

"That was young Peter. Remember anything about old Peter?"

"Yes," Blake answered after a moment's thought, "queer old chap—he'd have been called crazy if he'd been poor. Cut young Peter off without a cent after the Goldie episode, and shut himself on his yacht."

"That's the one," nodded Kent. "Several months ago," he began, a trifling hesitatingly, "I answered a notice in one of the English medical journals. An elderly gentleman, it read, intended to spend the remainder of his life on board his yacht, and wanted the services of a young physician, as companion as well as medical attendant. A good income was promised; the only qualifications were that the applicant be willing to cruise for months without touching land, and—this point was emphasized—he must be a woman hater."

"Well," urged Blake.

"I found out the author, and I answered it."

"And he was——" prodded Blake, impatiently.

"Old Peter Coleman."

"I told you he was crazy," grunted Blake.

"We exchanged several letters," Kent went on; "mine impressed him favorably, and he accepted me. After settling some affairs in England, he'd run over here, and I'd begin my career of catering to an old man's whim to the tune of twenty thousand per annum and prospects of inheriting several millions."

"Sounds fishy to me," remarked Blake. "What's the idea of your being shadowed?"

Kent groaned. "I swore in the blackest of ink that I was an incurable woman hater; but the old man isn't going to take a chance. I can't make a professional call but that little Italian perches himself near by with a watch in his hand. Every time I speak to a woman, I know he's writing it down. I'm getting desperate."

Blake puffed at his cigar. He was inclined to treat the affair as a joke, and the other's seriousness puzzled him. "Write and say you've discovered a weakness for the whole fair sex," he suggested finally, hiding the amused twinkle in his eyes by carefully flicking the ashes into his coffee cup.

Kent took the advice. He wrote a letter calculated to sever himself forever from all possible connection with Peter Coleman, woman hater; but inside of a few weeks it returned unopened, and the shadowing continued as before. Once, he managed to pounce on his pursuer, who was waiting patiently in a doorway. Kent had bided his time with the cunning displayed by a watchful spider, and he felt an unholy joy when the small man squirmed in his grasp with the wild antics of a captured fly. He shook him and swore at him in turn, but the little man jibbered back in Italian, and he was forced to let him go, as a blue-coated figure aroused itself to activity and lumbered suspiciously toward them. After that, he almost resigned himself to the idea of a permanent shadow, when a new method of ridding himself of his annoyance presented itself. Fate unexpectedly played into his hands a weapon with which he slayed his reputation as a woman hater. Not that Kent would have allowed himself to regard any woman as a means to an end; he had his touch of chivalry as well as the next, but perhaps that was his unconscious attitude toward the woman who entered his life as suddenly as she left it.

Returning from a call one afternoon, he took a short-cut through the park. It was a pet theory of his that women had lost the art of walking; and he watched with keen pleasure the woman in front of him. She was very tall, and moved with a supple swing of her body that reminded him of the peculiar grace he had once remarked in a tiger. He had unconsciously quickened his steps until he was quite close to her. Just then, she turned and met his frankly admiring gaze. He started, realizing his rudeness, and was about to take a side path, when she did something quite unexpected—she smiled. Somehow, he was disappointed; he hesitated for the fraction of a second, then, lifted his hat; hoping, as he did so, that the recorder of his deeds was close at hand.

"I'm bored," she said, as he dropped into step beside her. She regarded him seriously out of black-lashed gray eyes that were slightly almond-shaped.

"So was I," he replied, wondering what her next move would be.

"I'm doing an unconventional thing," she commenced, holding her muff against her cheek and looking at him from under her lashes.

"But you do it so charmingly," he murmured, as he smiled back into her eyes.

She gave him a quick glance, then laughed. "You are clever, Monsieur Kent," she startled him by saying.

"You are beautiful, Mademoiselle——" But she did not finish it for him.

"Beauty doesn't interest Monsieur; for he has many charming friends; but, alas, he loves none of them," she imitated the tragic tones of a seer.

They had left the park, and she stopped in front of one of the big apartment-houses that faced it. She stood on the steps for a moment toying with her muff, her head bent. Reason commanded Kent to bid a curt farewell and leave; but the spirit of adventure gave him an impatient pinch, and he found himself saying: "That's only a fortune half told."

She seemed to consider a moment. "I can't tell you any more today; the voices have become confused." She turned to go up the steps, her tone suddenly indifferent.

"I could tell yours with tea leaves," he suggested.

She hesitated, then smiled at him over her shoulder. "If you promise me a very nice one, I might give you the cup of tea."

"I promise," he returned, and followed her in silence, taking keen note of his surroundings.

When she finally stopped before a door, he experienced not a little uneasiness. Yet to do anything else but follow her into the room beyond was out of the question; Kent did not possess that form of courage that would have enabled him to appear ridiculous and turn in flight. Therefore, he entered the apartment, and, as nothing happened beyond his companion tossing her furs on a chair, he gave himself to the spirit of a harmless adventure. A hasty glance out the window assured him that his faithful pursuer was shivering against the bronze statue in the park. After the satisfaction such a picture gave him, he settled in an armchair to watch his companion as she prepared his cup of tea. All her movements were characterized by the grace that he had observed in her walk.

"You have very pretty hands," he said at length.

If she heard the remark she let it pass in silence. She sipped her tea and studied thoughtfully a small ivory god that sat on the mantel and winked back at her out of jeweled eyes. Her abstraction piqued him.

"Your thoughts seem to be serious ones," he ventured.

"Oh, yes," she shrugged her shoulders, "one can't help thinking once in a while." There was a shade of bitterness in her voice.

Kent rose and placed his empty cup on the table. The woman was leaning back in her chair, suddenly listless, while she regarded him quietly out of inscrutable gray eyes.

"Is it good-by?" he asked.

She gave him one of her sudden flashing smiles. "Good-by? The Germans have a kinder way of saying it—'Auf wiedersehen.'"

"I like that better, too," he answered.

After that first meeting, his visits became so frequent that, if they were reported, Kent lost forever his role of woman hater with old Peter Coleman. He found it restful, after a day's work, to drop into the quiet apartment for a cup of tea; and the woman herself fascinated him, as did all things that appealed to him as beautiful. He was a little amused at the name she gave him—Audre von Dernberg; yet Audre, he thought, suited her restless personality. He grew accustomed to her swiftly-changing moods, that were now gay, now sad, and at times utterly despondent.

"She is a remarkably fascinating woman," Kent mused to himself more than once; "but she'd wear any man to a string."

He told himself frequently that he would not see her again; the little dark man had ceased to annoy him, and besides one or two things had happened that vaguely alarmed him. Once, when he had resolutely stayed away from her and a week had passed, she had telephoned him. Her voice had been anxious; he even thought he detected tears in it, and though, at first, he had been annoyed, he had gone to see her that very evening. Another time, she had burst out rebelliously:

"You study me, Kent, as you would a—a specimen; to you I am nothing else; I am a new type and therefore interest you."

When he had responded: "You are a very foolish little woman," her eyes had grown suddenly sweet, and she had blushed like a girl under his half-playful tone.

Kent at his best was not analytical, he told himself angrily that he was a conceited fool. However, he decided to take a trip West; but although it was on his tongue a dozen times to tell her of it, he always excused himself, on some pretext or other, from doing it. As the time drew near for his departure, he decided to take her out somewhere to dinner. He told himself it would be easier to bring up the subject casually than it would be if they were alone. He did not confess to himself that he half feared a scene.

That evening came, however, and Kent quite forgot his resolution. A patient, whom he had thought on the fair road to recovery, had died that morning and the unexpectedness of the death had depressed him. He felt the longing for a woman's sympathy, and when she finally remarked on his silence, he told her the cause of it.

"He was only a young man, poor chap, and his life was snuffed out just when he had everything to live for—money, love, fame almost. Isn't it strange, Audre," he mused, "it is a call we all must answer, and we never know when."

A look of horror crept into her eyes. "Ah, let's not speak of it!" She made a gesture as though to push from her a thing she feared.

Her attitude puzzled him, for he regarded death as he regarded birth—the inevitable issues of life; but he stopped trying to reason with her when he saw that the subject actually frightened her. They dined in silence for a time, until gradually her gay mood came back, and she laughed and talked with her usual restless brilliancy, touching lightly here and there on a score of irrelevant subjects. Suddenly, the laughter faded from her eyes like the light of a candle blown out; she turned white and swayed in her chair. He sprang forward and and caught her as she would have fallen.

"A taxi," Kent ordered, turning to the waiter, his voice sharp with anxiety. The waiter ran ahead; Kent followed with Audre, unconscious, in his arms. He bit his lips with annoyance, as he hastened with her past the stare of curious diners.

On the sidewalk, he paused, frowning. At a shrill signal whistle a taxi across the street lurched into action, turned, skidding on the wet pavement, and drew up to the curb with a final jerk. He brushed aside a passer-by who would have stopped him and stepped into the car. He managed to thrust a bill into the dusky hand of the waiter, who had been coughing uneasily up to that time. Then the door slammed, and the car started forward. As they sped down street after street the woman lay motionless in his arms, and when the arc light flashed across her face showing it white and still, he reassured himself, by the faint throb of her heart, that she was still alive. When he entered the room, the maid quietly took her from him.

"Madam is often like this," she told him calmly.

In spite of this assurance, it was not for hours that Kent began to breathe easily. Gradually, a faint color came back to her lips; she opened her eyes and stared piteously into his as he bent over her.

"Tell me I won't die," she pleaded.

"No, Audre, my word as a physician, you won't die," he told her. "Now, take this and go to sleep."

She pushed the glass aside. "You won't leave me?" Her eyes darkened with terror. "Oh, Kent, don't leave me—I'm so terribly afraid."

"I won't leave you," he promised gently; "the minute you call, I will come to you."

Then she drank the sleeping powder, and in a moment, was quiet. Kent paced the drawing-room, pausing now and then to listen to her light breathing. At last, he flung himself on a divan and slept until the sun, streaming in on him, awoke him. He glanced at his watch in amazement—it was 9 o'clock. As Audre was still under the influence of the drug, he gave a few instructions to the maid and left. He had a particularly hard day, and try as he would, he was unable to return until late in the afternoon. Audre, he knew, was out of danger; but she had such an unreasonable fear of death that he did not wish her to be alone. When he finally reached the apartment, he was relieved to have the maid tell him she had quite recovered and would see him.

She always kept him waiting; so he wandered aimlessly around the room. His glance fell on the little ivory god on the mantel; as he picked it up, its little jeweled eyes seemed to wink at him maliciously and he put it down with a feeling of annoyance. He seated himself and fell to wondering, for the first time, just who Audre von Dernberg was, where she came from, who were her friends. He suddenly realized that she was not part of an adventure, but a woman; and there must be an answer to all of these questions. He told himself that this would be the last time he would see her, and he was beginning to feel a trifle self-righteous over this resolution when he heard footsteps. He rose to his feet; but to his surprise, a man entered the room and faced him.

For a moment the two measured each other in silence, and Kent judged that the stranger was a man in his forties. He was more than well dressed, and at first glance one would have called him even handsome. But the pale blue eyes under their slightly

A BOY'S ADVENTURE

[The following story is a translation from the original Eskimo made by a young woman nativé of Northern Alaska, who is now living in Southern California.—Ed. Illustrated Weekly.]

IN A LAND far to the north where the white bear lives in peace and the caribou makes its home, there lived in the long ago time, three people, two men and a boy. The boy was ten snows gone and beginning to be a great hunter and a fast runner. Already he could sometimes catch an overfed caribou, and by holding with his hands when he caught one, soon became very strong in the arms and fingers. One day he caught a young bear and choked it to death, but while he was doing it the bear hugged him so tight that he did not care to catch any more than way.

His father and uncle were men of little talk and answered not his questions of where the bears and caribou went when the great light sank below the ice and the long night began.

In the dark days when the great light slept the three people made their bows and arrows and spears of wood that they took from the large oomiakpuk (ship) that was lying wrecked on the shore.

Once when the uncle was in a talking mood, he told the boy some people with snow faces came in this boat a long time ago, when the days were getting dark and the ice took such a strong hold on the boat, the snow-faced people could not break it, even after they had tried for many days to cut it away with the funny looking things with sharp edges, and wooden handles, that they called axes.

The snow-faced men were many when they came, but after two snows had gone by, there were none left. The last two were seen to follow the bears and two snows later were found frozen in an iceberg and are now drifting away far into the North where the great light sleeps.

Since that time the big oomiakpuk has furnished wood for bows, arrows and spears and also the funny things the snow-faced men called axes.

After hearing the story the boy became inquisitive and asked his uncle where the people came from, but the uncle could not tell. Often had the boy climbed the one pole that remained still upright in the oomiakpuk to look for bears, or for the return of the great light after its long sleep, and often had he gone fearfully down into the dark inside to gaze in awe at the big drinking cups (watet casks) of the snow-faced men.

There was nothing left of the snow-faced men now but a few bones, crushed in small pieces by the bears which had eaten them and the boy, judging by the size of the drinking cups, thought that the snow-faced men were very large and strong, to use such large cups and paddle such a big boat! He knew that he was not as strong as his father or uncle, for he had seen them both fighting with a bear, with no spear, and with only their hands, tearing him limb from limb and he tried in every way that he could to gain strength.

He noticed that after a few trials he could climb much easier and more quickly gain the top of the pole, so he made a practice of climbing it every day.

One day a white fox ran close to him and then, as if challenging, darted ahead a short distance and looked back at the boy. The challenge was accepted and after a long time running over hills and across deep crevices and low flat tundra, white fox was glad to dart into a hole in the hill where the ground had cracked open from the intense cold of the winter time. The boy was not tired at all and laughed aloud as he thought of the scared look on white fox as he disappeared into the hole.

Every day he grew stronger and could run faster than the caribou that came from far away. He chased the ptarmigan and kept them on the wing until they could no longer fly and fell from exhaustion.

Three gray wolves, large and fierce, attacked him but he laughed joyously and gave battle, scorning to use his spear. He seized one in each hand and held them at arm's length, choking them to death as he gave chase to the third, which he soon caught and killed in the same manner. His igloo (house) was warm with wolf skins on the walls and skins of the white bear on the floor.

His clothes were made of caribou skins, which kept him warm and comfortable in the coldest weather. Strips of wolverine were sewed on his parka (coat) and the tail of the wolverine strapped on behind for ornamentation. His mukluks (boots) were made of seal skin and sewed with the tendons of the caribou.

His arrows were tipped with flint and the shaft feathered with ptarmigan wings and so true were they made that he could pierce the eye of a caribou while yet far away and running fast. Many walruses and seals fell victims to his ready spear and there was no lack of food in his igloo.

When eighteen snows had gone by he was a strong man and no animal was as fleet of foot as he. One day while he was chasing a fast running white fox, he suddenly came upon a very startling scene! His uncle was fighting with a large white bear and the bear was on top. He did not stand very long, but with a yell, sprang upon the bear and seized him by the throat. After a most desperate struggle, the bear slept quietly and breathed no more.

His uncle was in a serious condition and would soon have slept had not the boy come to his assistance when he did. His clothes were torn in strips and many deep scratches were on his body. He scarcely breathed. The boy took off his own parka and placed it very carefully over his wounded uncle, picked him up and carried him very tenderly over the rough tundra to his igloo many miles away, never once resting until he laid him carefully on a nice soft bed of wolf and lynx skins.

For many days he cared for his uncle, washing his wounds with the juice of the caribou moss that grew so plentifully on the tundra. Each day he gathered and boiled it until it became tender and then applied it to the wounds so that there was no pain. Under such careful nursing his uncle soon got well and strong again and loved the boy very much.

Now it was that the boy asked questions and the uncle answered. He learned for the first time that there were other people living on the other side of the blue mountains, over which the great light climbed the highest.

His father had forbidden him ever to cross these mountains and to keep his back to them always, and like a dutiful son he had obeyed, though many times he had to permit his game to escape when it ran toward them. He learned that his father and mother had quarreled and his father and uncle had taken him when a child and crossed the mountains in the dark days and made their way up into this land, leaving no word of their going and the people must have thought them swallowed by the fire spirit that sometimes blew smoke and ashes from far back in the mountains.

He had always thought of himself as a boy and that he would remain such, but now he learned that he would grow old and be like his father and uncle. He became restless and unhappy and wanted to go and see those people that were of his own age and play with them as his uncle did when he was a boy.

For a long time he did not go to hunt and food became scarce, so that he was hungry often. Then he would catch a rabbit and live for a few days longer until hunger again drove him in search of food.

One day his father and uncle went hunting as usual and many days passed and they did not return. At last he went in search but could find no trace of them and came to the conclusion that they had been caught by an avalanche of snow and carried out into the sea.

There being now no reason why he should live alone, he made arrangements to go and visit the people his uncle had told him of, on the other side of the mountains that smoked. He carefuly folded all the wolf skins by themselves and covered them with oiled sealskin to keep off the moisture and did the same with all the other skins that were left, such as bear, black fox, marten, lynx, caribou and arctic hare. Having everything in good order, he dug sods of tundra and piled them about the entrance of the igloo to keep prowling animals out. He carefully covered the window in the roof so that no animal might gain entrance while he was away.

In the beginning of the dark days he began his journey over the fire mountains, watching closely that the fire spirits should not awake and become angry at this intrusion. He walked very carefully as he approached the mountain that smoked, so that no rock was loosened to roll down the side to awaken the sleeping monster. Once a great puff of black smoke leaped high into the air and his heart fainted so that he fell to the ground and moved not until the smoke went away.

After three days of toilsome crawling, he succeeded in getting over without waking the monster and found himself in a pleasant valley through which a beautiful stream of clear, sparkling water ran smoothly in the direction in which he wanted to go. Beautiful trees and flowers grew along its banks, such as he never had seen, it being too cold and icy in his land for such things to grow. Many beautiful trout were swimming in the stream and he killed some with his spear and ate them for his dinner, and nothing had ever seemed so delicious.

After he had eaten he lay among the flowers, inhaling their sweet perfume and resting after his toilsome journey. Suddenly he raised himself on one elbow and listened. Around a bend in the stream came a canoe made of birch bark and seated in the center was a most beautiful maiden and the dip of her paddle was the noise that he had heard. She saw him also and stopped paddling to look upon him, wondering who he was and where he came from.

He thought it must be some fair spirit out of the stream and was afraid to move for fear of alarming it so that it would disappear and he could never see it again, but he was soon relieved when she paddled a little closer and asked him who he was and where he came from.

He told her though he was trembling all over and scarcely knew what he said to her. His knees trembled so that he could not stand and he had to sit down. His teeth chattered so that he could not speak at last, and she, giving a contemptuous look, paddled away and left him almost without breathing. He saw the look that she gave him and a feeling came over him to do something that would cause her to change her opinion of him. After a short while, when he had recovered his composure, he arose and followed in the direction that she had taken down the stream. He ran fast where the trees were not so thick but did not catch up with her until evening time, and she looked at him with admiration as he came running toward her.

It was a long distance that he had to run, and she knew how hard it was to get through the trees and brush that grew along the way. She was pleased to think that he admired her enough to exert himself so much for her sake, so she was kind to him and invited him into her mother's house and a large number of people came in to see the stranger and hear him talk.

He told them his story, and they were astonished to hear that he had crossed the dreaded mountain that smoked and was here to tell of it. And when they were told that he had run from where the girl saw him to this place in one afternoon, through all those trees and brush, they admired his strength and fleetness very much and prophesied he would marry the beautiful girl in whose house he was.

During the evening he learned that the girl had said she would marry the man that could beat her running and that several young men had already tried to win her but failed in the attempt.

He also discovered that she was vain and proud of her good looks and did nothing to help her mother and his admiration turned to dislike. He was not invited to remain all night and nobody had thought to ask him to stay with them, thinking that he would remain where he was.

So he walked on down the stream for a short distance intending to sleep in the brush, when he heard a low, sweet voice singing close by, and after a short search he discovered a grass-covered pile, as he first supposed it to be, but which proved to be the dwelling place of a poor young girl and her grandmother.

He entered and spoke kindly to them and was astonished to hear the old lady call him "Oom-o-lo-go-shook" (caribou-nose), and say that she had been expecting him for a long time and knew all about his travels.

The young girl was bashful and held her head down when he looked toward her which he did quite often and in a little while he hung his head also and the old grandmother seeing this, knew what it meant, so to put them at their ease she told them they were meant for each other and they must marry when they became better acquainted.

So he made his home with them and provided meat and skins for clothing, for they were very poor.

The girl told him that the beautiful girl he had first met was named "Shooluk," and was very rich and proud and could run faster than any young man in the village and would marry any man that could best her. Oomologoshook, for this was the boy's name, then told her how fast he could run, but that he would not marry Shooluk under any circumstances. This pleased Koppook, which was the girl's name and she challenged him to run a race with her, and he was very much surprised to find that he could not leave her behind whether he ran fast or slow and the old lady explained this by saying they were one and could not leave each other. Shooluk became jealous of Koppook and determined to marry Oomologoshook, so a race was decided upon and she, knowing that he was the fastest of all the young men, would get him for herself. She thought that she would be sure to win him this way and get the best of Koppook, not knowing that Koppook could now run fast.

On the next day the race was run, and Koppook and Oomologoshook kept together, just behind Shooluk, who was running very fast, until they got near to her house, into which the successful runners must enter first to win the race and then they ran quickly to the front, hand in hand, and entered the house, leaving her outside, very much surprised and chagringed; but it was her own proposal and she could make no complaint.

Oomologoshook and Koppook were now man and wife and were very happy. He provided for the house in a surprising way to his dear wife and her grandmother, bringing home many skins of animals and plently of food, so that he soon came to be a very rich man in the village.

The old lady told him that his mother was dead and there were none of his relatives now living. He told them of his home beyond the fire mountains and of all the beautiful skins that he had left there. The old lady told him that he would not know his home when he saw it again, but the young man could not understand this.

Oomologoshook was happy in his home life, but still his thoughts would return to his old home and he longed to be living there once more. He talked so much about it to his wife that after a while they wanted to go and live there and be by themselves, so one day they invited all their friends to a farewell dinner and made each one a present of a skin of some animal and then took their departure by a new route that the old grandmother knew of through the mountain. They were but a few hours going through, though it had taken him three days to crawl over it.

They soon reached the igloo, which he found transformed into a large house, beautifully furnished with fine furs, the floors covered with bear skins nicely tanned and beds lined with the finest fawn skins sewed with tendons and swansdown.

He was very much astonished at all that he saw, but his wife's grandmother told him to rest easy, because this was his reward for obeying his father in not approaching the fire mountain while he was alive and also for being such a good husband and so kind to old people.

After saying this she disappeared and they remained in the house.

Into the Mogollon Country. By Bert Haskett.

ARIZONA'S INTERIOR.

IN ALL the West there is today no place of any great size remaining as yet in its virginal wildness. The very mountains, forests, deserts, valleys, canyons, all have long since yielded up their rarest scenic treasures. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the Yosemite Valley, the Yellowstone National Park and many other beauty spots of scarcely less prominence, places where the Indian alone and in silence once prayed to the God of his fathers, are Meccas toward which the eyes and feet of thousands now turn annually. The traveler in search of the unvisited scenic attractions must needs wander far afield into the remote recesses of the high Sierras. Even here he will find that the prospector, the ranchman or the pioneer settler has preceded him. Their number, however, is small. Still remaining there are comparatively large areas where the permanent settlers are few and widely separated—areas as yet having much of their virginal affluence and primitive charm.

For the one who desires to seek out the lonely places, the forested areas of the Mogollon Plateau of Northern Arizona have much to offer in the way of beauty, natural wildness and remoteness from the beaten paths. As we know it this great highland extends from the San Francisco Peaks, North Central Arizona, across the State in a southeasterly direction to the Sierra Blanca, or White Mountains, near the New Mexico border. Generally speaking, its altitude varies from 6500 to 8500 feet above sea level. Scattered here and there along its summit are peaks that exceed even these levels.

Lying between and apart from the main routes of travel across the State, this great timbered highland—one of the largest in the entire West—is but little known to the traveling public. For sheer charm and beauty it equals anything to be seen in the country. A trip into its more distant parts is best made in June, when its uplands and valleys first take on their springtime liveries of green.

To reach the wilder and more beautiful parts one has no choice but to go on horseback, carrying his bed and provisions on a pack animal. Much depends, of course, upon proper equipment. The horse and pack animal should be on more than friendly terms, so that the latter will follow footloose during the day and stay with the horse at night when the two are hobbled out to graze. A young mule, one contented with its station in life, and of an amiable disposition, is best suited for the pack for the reason that a mule is inclined to fall in love with its workmate, a state of affairs that will keep the two together, thus making it certain that wherever the horse is found there will the mule be also.

Scattered hither and yon along the way from ten to thirty miles apart are sheep and cattle ranches where the latchstring always hangs out to the traveler. The one, however, who prefers to follow his own inclinations wholly had best carry his food with him. When thus supplied one is free to follow the beckoning call of the little voices forever luring him onward. After a long day's ride one can make camp wherever night finds him, prepare his own meals by camp fire, and make down his bed and sleep on the pine needles in the dreamy woods under a "sky bright with the beauty of a thousand stars."

In supplying his larder the traveler should take into consideration the fact that more food is required on an occasion of this kind than when one is less actively engaged indoors. In the writer's experience there is nothing like a long ride in the keen mountain air to give one an appetite. Hence one can ill afford to run short of food, as it would materially lessen the enjoyment of the trip, for, as Mark Twain sads: "Nothing helps scenery like ham and eggs."

Horses, pack animals and guides, together with the other essentials, can easily be provided at Flagstaff. From here one's way lies in a southeasterly direction. The first day's ride puts one well beyond the areas that have been logged. Thenceforth the trail leads through a magnificently timbered country of towering heights and shadowy depths, ever joyous with the song of birds and the melody of Pandean pipes, with days of sunny radiance, and nights of ivory moonlight.

It is a trail along which one may wander at will—a place in which to rest in unregenerate idleness, to dream and to invite your soul—where with,

"A book of verses underneath the bough,
A jug of wine, a loaf of bread—and thou
Beside me singing in the wilderness,
Oh, wilderness were paradise enow!"

The crest line of the Mogollons once reached, one finds before him wide vistas of surpassing loveliness, the country descending northward in a series of more or less regular undulations pineclad to their very summits. To the south the escarpment drops sheer for hundreds of feet, the plant life changing in the lower altitudes to the stunted growths peculiar to the rainless areas.

Continuing always in a southeasterly direction along the ridgepole of the mighty plateau, each succeeding mile discloses both to the right and left long stretches of timbered heights and depths where giant pines, firs and spruces toss together in the mellow sunlight in their pristine purity and luxuriance. At rather frequent intervals dead volcanic cones thrust their heads into the sky, rising to considerable heights above the surrounding hills and standing out like so many dauntless guardians of the woodland fastnesses, their summits each day catching the first and last rays of "the all-beholding sun." Often in the garish lights of evening I have seen these old craters metamorphosed by the setting sun into pinnacles of opaline and amethystine, color effects peculiar to the high, dry Sierras, and beautiful beyond description.

Atop of these craters, the chimneys of early volcanic fires long since quiescent, one may look down for miles about on scenery the equal of any in America. Near at hand stands the mighty forest of pines and firs rising and falling in serried ranks over the hills and valleys like an invading host of spearmen clad in liveries of green. Farther out along the northern horizon's rim stretches the Painted Desert, its surface chiseled into myriads of fantastic domes, pinnacles and minarets as rich in color effects as ever a rainbow. To the northwest, rising in proud pre-eminence in a cobalt sky to heights upward of 13,000 feet, their outlines clear and well defined, are the San Francisco Peaks, three in number. Seen from afar in their silent majesty, there is about them some magnetic power that impels one's attention much as a loadstone draws steel. Unconsciously one runs toward them many times in the course of the day.

Situated in a region noted for its scenic wonders, they appear to be conscious of their own lordly supremacy and always to be crying out to you, "Thou shalt have none other gods but us."

Look in what direction you will there is always the illimitable witchery of the wide horizons, where drowse mountains rugged of outline, half submerged in veils of lilac and purple, their summits bare and eroded like the crumpled skin of an octogenarian.

Over the hills, in the valleys, wherever you turn there is a wealth of plants and grasses hardly to be expected in a land famous for its aridity. Opening out at frequent intervals between the pines where the shade is heaviest and the moisture is conserved there are many young trees putting forth after the manner of their kind, giving promise of maintaining the continuity of the forest in years to come, nature's deadliest enemy, mankind, permitting.

Richer than all are the valleys, canyons and other favored spots, places that are literally choked with foliage.

Strange as it may seem there is a scarcity of water during the early summer that one would hardly expect, considering the abundance of plant life. The secret of it is that sufficient moisture is absorbed by the soil from the winter snows to sustain and keep the vegetation until the summer showers that begin early in July. Only at infrequent intervals are springs to be found. When thus met with they are surrounded by small clumps of aspen and cottonwood, the bright green foliage of which presents a pleasing contrast with the darker-hued conifers.

Where one is familiar with the ways of wild animals he may expect, now and then in the lonely places, to come upon deer, antelope, bear, wild turkey, mountain lion and other game animals. Often at night the wonted stillness of the forest is broken by the yap of coyotes. Occasionally a timber wolf adds its voice to the nocturnal serenade. One has little to fear, however, from any of the foregoing. The timber wolves and mountain lions, by reason of their paucity and cowardly nature, rarely if ever attack their arch enemy, man. Either, when sounding its call at night after the fashion of its kind, has sufficient terror in its voice to send chilly sensations down one's back when one happens to be alone.

Grazing peacefully on the open hillsides herds of sheep quite often are to be seen in the care of Mexican shepherds or "herders." For days at a time these guardians of the flock stay with their charges with no help other than their faithful dogs. In the main the lives of these herdsmen is largely nomadic. Every two or three days the herd is moved to new pastures, each night camp being made near the sleeping flock. One is always sure of a welcome at such places. Indeed politeness and hospitality are characteristics common to even the humblest of these descendants of old Spain. To see them around their camp fires at night near their flocks reminds one of those other shepherds in the hill country of Judea more than 1900 years ago, to whom the angel of the Lord appeared, saying: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Foregathering in the sunny upland meadows, where the succulent grasses grow, many cattle are to be seen. As a rule they are wild as deer, and look upon one's approach with fear and suspicion. Now and then, riding across country alone or in groups of twos and threes, one meets cowpunchers astride of half-wild cayuses. Superb horsemen are these hardy sons of the cattle country, and hospitable to a fault. Met with under the most trying circumstances they very graciously point out the way to you, invite you to dinner or assist you in any way possible. Many of these young fellows are Texans by birth and training, a fact that you readily recognize in their garb, their horsemanship or their slow, southern drawl. To meet them at the ranches on the "round-ups," to hear their quaint tales of life on the ranges where bravery, quickness and endurance are essential, is no ordinary pleasure.

After days of travel through interminable forests—a hundred miles as the crow flies, but half as far again by trail—you at length reach the Mormon settlements, Heber, Pinedale, Linden, Pinetop and others. Here along the water courses, in the mountain meadows and woodland valleys, and in some cases on the great dry mesas, one sees the first serious attempts at farming. On each plot of ground in any way arable, a Mormon settler has his homestead, where he contrives to eke out a precarious livelihood for his horde of children, by means of irrigation, dry-farming methods, or stock-raising on a small scale. With the droughts, the floods and the frosts of the higher altitudes to contend with his task is often difficult in the extreme. In the more favored of these mountain settlements, where water for irrigation is available, with their streets lined with Lombardy poplars, their fields of grain and alfalfa and their fruited orchards, there is much of the charm and beauty of the rural districts in the upper Mississippi Valley States.

As the White Mountains are approached there is a noticeable increase in the plant life. In the valleys, the meadows and on the hillsides there is a wealth of it that never ceases to surprise you. The tree growths on the higher slopes are more dense and larger than elsewhere along the great plateau.

Along the water-courses the brambles and underbrush are so rank that one can hardly squeeze through them in places, while between the trees in the open spaces the ground is knee deep in grasses. The whole region in fact is a veritable Eden, rioting in its richness. Never—no, not even in dreams—were such forests, such silver streams, such odorous glades, such wild flowers—never such mountains, such meadows, such skies.

Unlike other parts of this great highland, water is abundant here. In many of the valleys and canyons there are living streams—streams overarched with leafy treetops and abounding in quiet pools where speckled mountain trout have their haunts—places such as the disciples of Izaak Walton see in their fondest piscatorial dreams, but never quite come upon in reality. In the forest uplands back from the streams one can have a try at deer, turkey, bear, mountain lion and other game. Where one is a born sportsman, and observes the game laws, the chances are that he will bag most of the foregoing in plenty.

Whether one is seeking health, recreation or the fountain of eternal youth, the White Mountain end of the Mogollon Plateau is unsurpassed for any of these purposes. Its forests, as yet untouched by the hand of man, have a thousand charms for the one with the lure of the woods and fields upon him.

To hunt wild game over the timbered hills, to fish for trout along the unfrequented streams, to ride or walk through the leafy glades, to watch from some vantage point the rosy dawns or golden sunsets, to gather about the camp fire at night after days afield, to smoke and talk with your friends until drowsiness overcomes you, to go to your camp bed on the pine needles under the trees, "wrap the draperies of your couch about you and lie down to pleasant dreams," are some of the joys of life in the open in this part of Arizona, the land of the sun.

Turned the Tables.

Simplified spelling is not the only qualification of the successful stenographer.

"What did you learn at the school?" the boss asked the fair young applicant for the stenographer's job.

"I learned," she replied, "that spelling is essential to a stenographer."

The boss chuckled.

"Good. Now let me hear you spell essential."

The fair girl hesitated for the fraction of a second.

"There are three ways," she replied. "Which do you prefer?"

And she got the job.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Watts not a Piker.

Alfred Watts, the young futurist poet, was lunching with his publisher at a Broadway restaurant recently, and while waiting for his bill he amused himself by matching quarters with his host. After several dollars had changed hands, the publisher looked through the window at one of those entertaining little Detroitobiles standing at the curb, and said, facetiously:

"I'll match you for that car, Alfred."

Mr. Watts tossed back his much-photographed golden mane and remarked, with his characteristic drawl:

"Aw, don't be a piker! I'll match you for $2."—[New York Times.

The Injured Colonel.

One New Year's morning a Kentucky colonel, who is a regular guest of a Louisville hotel, came down to breakfast with a bandaged hand.

"What's the matter with the hand?" asked several friends.

"Confound it all!" exclaimed the colonel. "We had a little party last night, and one of the younger men got intoxicated and trod on my hand as he was walking across the room."—[Baltimore Sun.

Angels that Bite.

One evening during the summer, as Pauline's mother was putting her to bed, she said:

"Now, go right to sleep, dear. Don't be afraid, for God's angels are watching over you."

Shortly after, while the mother and father were reading in the library, the child called to her mother.

"Yes, dear," replied the mother, "what is it?"

"God's angels are buzzing around just awful, mother," cried the little girl, "and one of 'em's bitten me!"—[New York Times.

Margery of the Movies. By Alice Harriman.

LITTLE CUCQ.

Maggie Conaty lagged as Company Four, from the Foothills Motion Picture Studio, toiled over the dunes. The stout, important director, Mr. Thaxter Brigham, called to her. But she did not hasten. Rather, she walked more slowly. The stumbling, perspiring procession ahead, walking two by two as had the animals going docilely toward Noah's ark, seemed to her sun-dazzled eyes to merge into one wavering line. The glittering steel rails of the road running west through Rutherford, New Jersey, had done the same thing on sweltering August afternoons when she and Bobbie Dooley had played beside the tracks just outside the city limits, years ago.

The line of people vanished around one of the higher dunes. So had the railroad running west from Rutherford, N. J., wound its way around a curve and vanished. Just outside the city limits, years ago, Maggie Conaty and Bobbie Dooley had wondered what lay beyond . . . beyond. Today wading through the California beach dunes, Maggie, at least, knew. As for Bobbie—she had never heard of him since his family moved from Rutherford.

The objective point of her younger days, when the shrinkage of her gingham slips was only equaled by the lengthening of her slim young legs, was Fame. By what she could remember of Bobbie Dooley and of what the neighbors had said about him, his certain destination was the penitentiary.

Today, she and the company toiling through the unasphalted solitude were headed for a simulated pyramid, built the week before by the Foothills' carpenters far enough back from shore to suggest Saharan wastes. Its apex was visible; but its base was hidden by updrifts of perfectly clean but exceedingly trying sand.

Were they the same—her childish ambitions and this simulated pyramid? Maggie Conaty, suddenly and deliberately sinking into a comfortable hollow in the dunes, which the sun had not yet heated, decided that if they were she would have none of them. She was tired—tired of it all.

With languor she lay back on the updrift of sand whose sides made an amphitheater. Her eyes, narrowing as she watched ecstatically the continuous performance of a dragonfly, were colored like its jeweled wings. Through the sage-green, yellow-brown of the dragonfly's wings and the thick, long lashes of her half-shut eyes she could look steadily out on the glittery, white-fringed Pacific. This amphitheater was hers by right of discovery. She also claimed the ocean, and the dragonfly.

Right royally did Maggie Conaty, known in celluloid circles and in Twinkleland as Margery Carlisle, dismiss all other subjects from her but the whispering ocean and the splendidly alive dragonfly. Was Company Four "out on location" to have pictures made for "The Tiger's Leap?" Yes; but the fact might have been a vagary of dreams. Into oblivion went also Mr. Brigham. This was more than unkind. It was akin to ingratitude. Had not his keen appraisal detected her possibilities? Was she not now daily applauded in every movie theater that ran the Foothills films?

One by one Gilmer Meriwether, the boyish camera man; "Ruddy" Prince, the loquacious head of the animal farm; the chattering girls and the cigaretted boys; the camel; even the tiger, whom age had pushed into the movies—all resolved themselves into beings unsubstantial as sea wraiths—and were gone.

Maggie Conaty had a glorious half-hour. Ages, eternities, eons, were concentrated in that calm which included nothing but an amphitheater of sand, the sun-saturated ocean, white-fringed and whispering, and a glorious dragonfly.

Presently a little whiffit flew straight toward her on wings even more gauzy than the dragonfly's; but not so beautiful. She recognized it—Duty. And as it came it called—called:

"Come! Come! Come to the simulated pyramid farther back from shore! Come and be rescued from a ramping tiger by a camel! Come! Come!"

"I won't!" said Maggie Conaty, and sank back insolently in her sheltered, sloping circle of sand, where the sun was beginning to creep in.

Then Duty tempted: "In this film you'll reach the pinnacle of Fame!"

"I don't care!" replied Maggie Conaty, and turned with finality to watch the dance of the dragonfly and to listen to the whispering Pacific.

The whiffit floated away and so did the memory of the jocund boys and girls; the camera man and the animal trainer; the camel who had learned to rescue Maggie's dummy from an ancient tiger. Last of all, the tiger—Maggie loved the tiger—slipped from her mind, the tiger too blind to be aware that the stripes given her by her Maker had been freshened by her owner.

But when the whiffit went away, the sun grew bold. The dragonfly called his dance off and departed. The beckoning ocean drew nearer. Its whisper grew more insistent and louder until it seemed to the girl like the sound of a train speeding through and westward from Rutherford, New Jersey. Sleepily she recalled that she had often laid her curly head on the steel rail and listened to the train's oncoming. And after its dizzying rush past, she had again stooped to feel its ongoing—an——

As the roar of the shouting high tide—or was it the rumble of a westward-bound train?—grew fainter—fainter, until lost in sleep, Maggie Conaty was awakened by another sound that startled her as much as any she had ever heard in her not-so-long life. Why did her thoughts leap across the miles—and the years—to her mother's back yard, and to Bobbie Dooley?

For the moment the girl felt sure that she was still drowning. The next instant she felt certain that the sun, boldly and hotly embracing her in the amphitheater, had betrayed her senses; for the sand at her feet heaved, slithered smoothly away.

With a shriek the stellar attraction of the Foothills Motion Picture Company sprang to her feet. What was this—thing, poking a bit of pink to high heaven? Where, oh where, was the director? Where was the company? The camel? The tiger? Where was Bertram Drewaye, the slendid, two-hundred-and-fifty-a-week leading man who never spoke to the rest of the studio folk unless of necessity; yet whose presence made her tremble, whose touch thrilled? Where was he?

Shrieks did no good. Maggie tried them thoroughly, and she ought to know. The—thing—stayed right there in the slithering sand. It must be—it must, be a Gila monster! Ever since she had been on the western coast she had feared that she might run across one. Or it run across her, or something.

Oh, if it would only come right out so she could see what she had got to fight, thought Maggie Conaty. No, it was better that it did not. If it should, it would bite her, or sting her, or whatever Gila monsters did to people.

Another pair of impalpable wings floated above the circle of sand. They belonged to Courage, and Fear whisked away. Fear just couldn't stay when Courage flew into Maggie Conaty's heart and shone through her dragonfly eyes. Once she had run across those railroad tracks back in Rutherford, New Jersey, when an express train was coming on, full speed. Bobbie Dooley had been the near-by, admiring and applauding spectator. He had also been the instigator of her heroism. Others, not so near, had also been spectators; they had not applauded. In a flash Maggie remembered that it was immediately after this episode that Bobbie Dooley's parents removed themselves, and Bobbie, to another town.

Recalling the obvious fact that she had lived, even if she had run across the track, as an express train came around the curve, Maggie Conaty poked with the end of her sun-umbrella at the submerged—thing—submerged all but the tiniest tip o' pink. The response was immediate and illuminating. The bit o' pink lifted, and a squeal, like unto those often heard when she had played with Bobbie Dooley, went straight to Maggie Conaty's heart.

"You poor darlin'!" quoth she, pulling an exceedingly small pig from the smothering, slithering sand. Then she held it and crooned to it until its heart was won.

. . . .

A thoroughly exasperated director nearly threw a stout, important fit when he saw the girl he knew as Margery Carlisle approaching the simulated pyramid, near which he was imprinting footmarks in the hot sand. These leading ladies! and their whimsies! Yet he dared not say too much, for Miss Carlisle was sought by rival companies, and might take it into her head to adorn other studios. What he thought had best be passed over. But any director of any moving-picture company would have thought the same. They are but human.

The other members of the company also showed the effects of heat; but that was because the pyramid did not afford shelter from the vertical sun. Only the camel and the tiger were happy. They were fast asleep. On the whole, the welcome accorded to the recalcitrant Miss Carlisle might be said to be chilly—nay, even cold.

But Maggie Conaty's thoughts were still Maggie Conaty thoughts, as she ran breathlessly toward the frigidly torrid group. She had not yet remembered that she was Margery Carlisle, a movie star.

"See what I've found!" she called, and exhibited the morsel of pink and white, fast asleep in her slender arms.

The Pig from Nowhere, awakened by the voices, skirled its interior needs. But its squeals subsided into a long sigh of tinned-milk content after someone produced the remains of the lunch boxes. Then, and not till then, did picture-taking commence. After the half-blind tiger had placidly allowed the camel to rescue Margery from her jaws, as per directions given by the handsome but stout director, she as placidly allowed the tiny stranger to snuggle close up, and both fell asleep, safely outside the zone of further picture-taking.

"What are you going to do with that pig?" asked Bertram Drewaye, as the company, exhausted and limp, toiled toward the waiting automobiles.

"I'm going to keep it," replied Maggie Conaty, holding her piglet close. She was surprised beyond measure that the grand, two-hundred-and-fifty-a-week Drewaye should speak voluntarily—should show any interest in her treasure trove. She looked very girlish, very sweet, despite her make-up, as she continued: "I just love little pigs. I—I haven't had a pet; not since I was a little girl."

"Where do you suppose it came from?" queried someone, walking close.

"Likely from one of the small ranches back of Playa del Rey," sagely surmised the ex-circus man. "It's a runt," he announced, with finality.

The crowd, city-born, looked wise, too. No ex-circus man should air his superior knowledge of pigs and their differentiations to their humiliation—not if silence could help them out!

If this man knew so much about pigs, decided Maggie, he was the one to curry favor of. Not that she really had to curry favor; for he was a good-natured chap, anyway, and she was very, very pretty, with a sprightliness all her own.

So piggy's comfort was assured. And Brigham, bless him, made no objection. In fact, he looked with prescient eye at the piglet.

Bertram Drewaye also curried favor. But not from "Reddy" Prince, nor from the director of Company Four, of whom he thought not highly at all. But of Margery Carlisle. And Maggie Conaty—she always thought of herself as Maggie Conaty after the pig dropped from Nowhere—granted the favor. It would not hurt her pet, and the suggestion tickled her fancy.

"It's such a little thing," had said Drewaye, "that if I rubbed it all over with green chalk it would look like an animated cucumber."

So the pig was made up one afternoon when Margery and the handsome leading man could slip away. Drewaye made his accomplice promise not to tell who did the work, and she willingly took the onus of it. She admired his reserve so much that she could hardly believe that he had even suggested such a lark.

When piggy appeared in its flawless coat o' green, with one accord it was hailed by the entire force of the Foothills Company as "Little Cucq." It was baptized, too, when Company Four hadn't much to do. But that dulled its pretty grass-green coat. Thereafter, its daily bath, attended by Miss Carlisle when she could take time, was as regularly followed by the make-up, applied by Prince or one of his assistants, as was that of any other member of the Foothills Company.

Yes—a member, even though Cucq never signed a contract nor had Chandler W. Gregory, head of the company, signed even a guarantee. As the weeks sped by, Little Cucq was featured. Mr. Brigham's prescient eye had not played him false, any more than when Margery Carlisle presented herself to his notice as an applicant for a position. If Bertram Drewaye hadn't been drawing such a fat salary, and holding the company so closely with an ironclad contract, he might even have felt cause for a wee bit of jealousy of what might be called his godchild. As the weeks grouped themselves into months, Mr. Brigham wondered if Little Cucq wasn't the best drawing card the Foothills Company had. Meriwether, the boyish camera man, was certain that he was the easiest to take. Never a false move; never an arrested stare. Cucq was a joy. Certain it was that any film in which the tiny pet could be worked in drew bigger crowds and more applause than any other thousand-foot reel released by the Foothills concern. Especially when Margery Carlisle was its co-star. Then there WAS applause!

Meantime, Drewaye "pulled down" his salary regularly, worked when he had to, talked little. He wasn't sulky. He wasn't "grouchy." He was just Bertram Drewaye, and as such, the company accepted him from Mr. Brigham, who didn't like him any better than Drewaye liked the director of Company Four, to Margery Carlisle herself.

Little Cucq grew not at all. Its appalling appetite and its appeasal brought no perceptible increase of girth, of length. It was, except for its makeup, the wee piggy that fell over into and nearly smothered in the slithering sand of an amphitheater in the dunes beyond Playa del Rey where a girl lay asleep and the roar of the surf almost drowned its cry for help. The tiger still placidly allowed it to snuggle up to her and tacitly adopted it. The only thing that could draw a growl from her was when a strange hand reached to touch the curious green piggy, when visitors came to the animal farm. Then she gave a very good imitation of what a tiger would do if her young were attacked. And the visitors would go away and talk, and talk. It was splendid advertising.

But one day Cucq drooped. Maggie's heart almost stopped beating. She feared she was about to lose her one, her only pet! She simply couldn't, that was all there was to it! She had been saving her very good salary and had nearly bought back the house where she and her mother had lived. She had been dreaming of going back there, some day; and she could see, just as plainly as anything, a nice pig pen, a trim back yard, some morning glories climbing over the porch, and a hedge of sweet peas between her home and the house where Bobbie Dooley used to live.

Cucq, being indisposed for three days, was hustled into Mr. Brigham's very own automobile; and he, looking thoughtfully at Margery Carlisle, drove her and her piglet to the first ranch they could find.

"My little pig is sick," wailed Maggie Conaty as she exhibited her pet to the rancher. "Please, please let him stay out here in the country and doctor him—or something."

If the rancher had been other than an unemotional Japanese he might have doubted the evidence of his senses. A green pig! He had pigs, plenty of them; but they were not green. He evidently neither went to the movies nor read the billboards. However, arrangements were made whereby the pig was to stay under his care for a week. But the rancher drove a good bargain. He opined that the honorable green pig ate a great deal; and Maggie couldn't deny it. After his callers had departed the Japanese turned Little Cucq in with the other pigs and forgot all about it.

The week, long to Maggie Conaty, passed. But when she visited the ranch again her joy was unbounded. So was Cucq's. Still green as grass, albeit a dusty green, it ran to greet its mistress, frisky as a little well-brought up piggy should be. Dusted and caressed, Cucq was lifted into the automobile by Mr. Brigham him-

Why He Wasn't Guilty.

"IF you are not guilty as charged," caustically inquired the judge, "how is it that you were caught at half-past 10 o'clock at night in the immediate vicinity of the hen roost with a dead chicken concealed under your coat?"

"Dis hyah's huccome it," responded Brother Jackson glibly, "jes' disaway. I wuz comin' 'long home f'um prayer meetin' 'bout 10 o'clock. Ez I wuz a-shawt-cuttin' it froo de alley back o' de Mayor's henhouse I heerd a soun', a pow'ful s'picious soun'. Chickens squawkin'-like.

"I reckoned right away dey mus' be a varmint in de Mayor's henroost, so I sot out to pervestigate. Less'n I skeer de varmint off 'fore I git nigh ernuff to lambast him wif de club I wuz a-totin' I 'gun to squawk mase'f.

"When I come a-nigh I struck two three matches so's I c'u'd see to git de winder open. Den I poked dat club froo de winder, squawkin' all de while. Dey ain' nuffin happen yit, so I pulled out de club. When I pulled dat club outen dat henhouse dar wuz a young rooster settin' on it, right spang in the warm place whar I done scratch dem three matches.

"I kep' right on squawkin', an' soon's dat rooster heerd dat he up wif his fedders mighty rambunctious an' hyah he come. 'Gun to 'tack me, yassuh! Dat wuz de fightenest rooster ebber I see. Round an' round we went, an' up de alley an' down de alley, an' cross ways an' back ag'in, an' him fightin' me all de while. When I come to I wuz a half block down de alley an' de rooster wuz daid. Yassuh, daid! Jes' nachually run hisself plumb to death chasin' dis po' ol' man.

"Co'se, jedge, Youah Honor, you all see how 'tis. Dar I wuz wif a daid rooster on mah hands, an' if white folks happen 'long I sho'ly is liable to be s'pected o' some skulduggery. Why Alexander Wept.

THE teacher was telling his class about the conquest of Alexander the Great. He made the tale a stirring one, and at last reached the conquest of India. Wishing to impress the children, he said: "When Alexander had conquered India, what do you think he did? Do you think he gave a great feast to celebrate his triumph? No; he sat down and wept!"

The children seemed to be a little disappointed at this childish exhibition on the part of the hero; so the teacher continued. "Now, why do you think Alexander wept?" he asked.

Up went a little hand; but when its owner saw it was the only one in view, he hurriedly withdrew it.

"Come on now, Tommy," said the teacher in his most persuasive voice, "why do you think Alexander wept?"

"Please, sir," said Tommy hesitatingly, "perhaps he didn't know the way back!"

He Had Time to Waste.

E. M. BURGESS, vice-president and general manager of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company of Denver, was once making an automobile tour of inspection through Southern Utah, says the Evening Post. That State employs some of its convicts in the construction of roads. While on a narrow road the automobile party stopped at a shallow creek, which they were about to ford, in order to put water in the radiator.

A convict, hauling a load of crushed stone, pulled up behind them. The chauffeur was delayed a bit, and Mr. Burgess turned to the convict, saying apologetically:

"We'll pass on in just a moment."

"Oh, I'm in no hurry," the convict placidly replied. "I've got twenty years."

Making a Bargain.

A VILLAGE clergyman, walking round his parish, met an old parishioner. "Well, John," he said, "how is it I have not seen you at church for several Sundays?" "Hain't got no Sunday trousers," answered John. "Well," said the clergyman, "I think we can remedy that. I have a pair at home which will just about fit you, and I will have them sent to you today. "Thank'ee!" said John. The trousers were duly sent, and the following three Sundays John was seen at church. Then, after being absent for some time, the clergyman again met him. "Well, John," he said, "you have no excuse for not coming to church lately. How is it I have not seen you there?" "Look here, parson!" said John. "I like a man to speak plain. I know what you mean; you're a-thinking about them trousers. I come to church three Sundays, an', if you don't think I earned them trousers, just tell me how many more Sundays I shall ha' to come afore they're mine altogether!"—[Philadelphia Inquirer.

Quite Another Matter.

THINGS were looking black for the dangerous-looking customer in the dock. All the evidence pointed against him, until, in despair, the prisoner gave a secret sign to one of his cronies in the court.

His pal entered the witness box.

"May I," he began, "state what I know to be a fact? The prisoner in the dock has never, to my personal knowledge, received any education. I should like to mention that he cannot even write his own name."

The judge cast his eyes over his papers before replying:

"That is totally a side issue, and we do not consider those in this court. The prisoner is not charged with writing his own name, but with that of someone else!"—[Philadelphia Inquirer.

Not What He Expected.

THIS story is told by an English naval officer who witnessed the occurrence in Manila: "As I was crossing one of the numerous bridges across the Pasig River, I saw a native Filipino spit in the face of a Spanish officer, and then run for protection to the American sentinel, who was pacing the bridge. It was some time before the Filipino could make himself understood, but when the sentry comprehended, his action was very prompt, indeed. He handed his gun to the Spanish officer, caught the native by the nape of his neck and the seat of his trousers, and pitched him off the bridge into the Pasig River. Then he calmly took his gun from the officer, and began pacing his beat, as if nothing had happened."—[Unidentified.

The Optimist.

ON THE whole, poets do not seem to have too good a time of it. It is rather rare for an editor to see eye to eye with them in regard to the quality of their work.

Percival Fliptop had had his work "turned down" by five editors in succession, and was now being told the cold and bitter truth by the sixth. His rage got the better of him.

"Some day," he burst out, "you editors will be fighting for my work."

"Never mind," chortled he of the hard heart. "When that day comes, even if I lose, I'll be just as happy!"—[Philadelphia Inquirer.

His True Love.

DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST in his witty war on cosmetics said in a recent lecture in New York:

"A girl and a man sat under a palm in a rose garden on a soft March evening at St. Augustine.

"Is your love true?" the girl asked softly.

" 'As true,' the man answered in low, passionate tones, 'as the delicate flush on your cheeks.'

" 'Oh—er—ah,' the girl stammered hurriedly, 'isn't the—er—don't the roses smell sweet?' "—[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Not a Letter.

ONE morning a rather fidgety subordinate came into Col. Goethals's office in the Canal Zone, says Answers.

"I got your letter, colonel," he began, "and I came to——"

He got no further, for the colonel, with uplifted eyebrows, cut in:

"Letter? Letter? There must be some mistake. I have written you no letter!"

"Oh, yes, colonel," repeated the man. "I've got it here. It's about the work down at Miraflores. Now, you see——"

Again the colonel cut in:

"Oh, I see! But you misled me. You spoke of my letter. You meant, of course, my orders!"

The colonel's blue eyes stared coldly at the argumentative man, who, suddenly feeling that the conversation was at an end, "faded away."

How Willie Got Left.

MAJ. HUNT of Cincinnati said of a disgruntled politician:

"His hands are tied. He can do nothing. He is like Willie in the game of snapdragon.

"Willie, at a party given by his sister, was allowed to participate in the snapdragon game and sat amid a band of beautiful girls of 19 or so.

"The lights went out, the usual grabbing of favors began, and then, when the lights went up again, Willie was to be seen crying bitterly.

" 'What's the matter, Willie? Didn't you get anything?' a lady asked.

" 'No,' sobbed Willie spitefully. 'As soon as it got dark that consarned man with brown whiskers—boo, boo—he grabbed my hands and did not stop kissing them till the lights went up again."—[Cincinnati Enquirer.

What Edison Would Say.

THOMAS A. EDISON on his sixty-eighth birthday said to a reporter:

"The result of this war will be a German republic that in fifty years will forge ahead of us all."

The reporter, impressed by Mr. Edison's war knowledge, asked:

"What language do the Belgians use—Walloon, French, German?"

"Humph," said Mr. Edison, "I know well what language I'd use if I were a Belgian." —[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

College Logic.

THE Yale freshman year was proving very expensive to father, so father decided to have a "heart to heart" talk with Johnny, home for the week.

"Now, son," said he gravely, but affectionately, "your mother and I are spending just as little as we possibly can. I get up in the morning at 6:30 and I work until after 5. But, son, the money just won't go round at the rate that your expenses are running. Now, I ask you, as one man to another, what do you think we had better do?"

For a moment Johnny's head was buried in thought—and then he replied:

"Well, father, I don't see any way out but for you to work nights."—[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

At the Zoo.

A VERY stout lady at the zoological gardens, says the Philadelphia Record, was seeing the lions fed for the first time, and was rather surprised by the limited amount of meat that was given them.

"That seems to me to be a very small piece of meat for the lion," she said to the attendant.

The man looked at her with a glimmer of amusement in his eye. "It may seem a small piece to you, mum," he said, "but it's heaps for the lion."

Teaching Patriotism.

A SCHOOL TEACHER recently gave his pupils a lecture on patriotism. He pointed out the high motives which moved the territorials to leave their homes and fight for their country.

The school teacher noticed that one boy did not pay attention to the instruction, and as a test question he asked him:

"What motives took the territorials to the war?"

The boy was puzzled for a moment, then, remembering the public "send-off to the local regiment at the railway station, he replied:

"Locomotives, sir."—[London Tit-Bits.

He Understood.

THE prim young woman from New England who was devoting herself to the education of the negro in a southern school told one of her small scholars to bring a bucket of water from the spring.

"I ain't gwine fotch no water," he whined rebelliously.

"Oh, Eph!" she protested, "you mustn't say that. Don't you remember how I have taught you: First person, singular, I am not going; second person, you are not going; third person, he is not going. Plural: First person, we are not going; second person, you are not going; third person, they are not going. Now, Eph, do you understand it perfectly?"

Wished Him Long Life.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, while traveling in Ireland, was one day accosted by a beggar. He felt in his pocket for a sixpence, but finding that he had nothing smaller than a shilling with him, gave it to the woman, with the words: "You must give me the change next time we meet." "THERE goes another button!" said the man who was standing with his thumb hitched inside his waistband.

"Didn't you know it was loose?"

"Of course, I knew it was loose. I knew it was loose just as well as I knew that my hosiery needs a darning and that I ought to have a lot of needle and thread work done."

"Why don't you tell your wife about it?"

"Cheer up!" said the visitor kindly. "Remember, it's no use crying over spilt milk."

But Tommy replied, amid his sobs:

"I don't know," answered the office boy, "but I guess he must have been born under a lucky star."—[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

really pathetic.

From this on, Little Cucq, scrubbed and made-up daily, thrived beyond belief. And the weeks sped into months.

One morning, a year after she had played truant in the amphitheater of sand that was hers by right of discovery, with a dragonfly for entertainer and the whispering, coaxing Pacific reaching toward her, Maggie Conaty went as usual to look at her pet. No longer could she lift it, although it had never grown so large as an ordinary pig.

She found Little Cucq asleep in the curve made by the recumbent tiger. It always slept there. But the usually placid tiger was wide awake and swishing her tail.

Nothing in that to cause an outcry—no. Yet Maggie Conaty's shrieks set in motion all of the Foothills Picture Company, from the director-general himself, to the most insignificant "supe."

"The lions have got out!" exclaimed Mr. Gregory, as he ran.

sped in Maggie's direction. Everyone in the company knew of her dread of Gila monsters.

"Cucq's dead!" groaned "Reddy" Prince. His heart ached for the tiger, and he ran the faster. She would miss the little pig dreadfully.

Bertram Drewaye had happened by that way still earlier in the morning than Maggie Conaty. So he know why she screamed. But he ran with the best of them.

The camera man, Farrington, with a genius for grasping the possibilities of anything out of the ordinary, did not wait for his assistant, but focused and set the wheel turning as the entire company streamed past him. Then he grabbed the tripod and followed.

"O my Lord!" gasped Mr. Gregory, as he arrived at Maggie's side.

"Good Lord!" gasped the director of Company Four, as he arrived.

"Alive," gasped the manager of the animal farm thankfully, as he arrived.

"Oh, you darlin's!" gasped Maggie Conaty with what breath she had left, and filled

Gilmer Meriwether, as he arrived and promptly set the tripod. With a vigorous sweep of his boyish arms he shoved the crowd aside and began to grind out the scene before him. The tiger had risen; Little Cucq looked up foolishly to its mistress, and it made a dandy picture.

"I'll give you $500 for the bunch!" cried Prince, with visions of a side-show attraction that would bring a fortune. The newcomers were incredibly small. "That is," he hedged, "if they aren't just 'dolled up.'"

"They are," spoke the splendid Drewaye. "I put the green chalk on—I made 'em up, an hour ago." Everybody was so excited that they didn't think what a queer thing that was for the exclusive leading man to do.

"I don't want to sell," said Maggie Conaty. She was wise as to the vaudeville value of the unexpected gift with which Little Cucq had presented her. "I'll take in the dollars, myself," she continued. "But I'll tell you what I will do. I'll buy the tiger. I'm going to resign——"

"I've got something to say about that,"

"Our contract expires in two months," reminded Maggie. Then she turned to the ex-circus man. "The tiger'd be awfully lonesome without Little Cucq; and I expect Cucq would miss her, too, even if she has got these babies—bless 'em!" She squeezed the pink-and-white morsels in her arms and continued: "So, I'll give you your price for the tiger, and after I train these piglets, I'll take 'em—the whole bunch, Cucq, tiger and the babies—on the Orpheum circuit for a season, and then——" she turned, radiant to the gaping crowd, "I'm going straight to a little home I've been paying for, just outside the city limits of Rutherford, New Jersey, and be plain Maggie Conaty again. I'm tired of Fame!"

She looked so pretty and so darling, and her soft-yellow, curly hair clustered around her neck so adorably as she clasped the wee animals that Meriwether nearly forgot to keep his camera registering.

"Maggie Conaty!" repeated the big, splendid, two-hundred-and-fifty-a-week leading man. "If you are Maggie Conaty, I'm going back East, too. I'm Bobbie Dooley!"

On the Up Grade. By Vlasta A. Hungerford.

THE EDITORIAL.

FRANK BRANDON looked up with bleary eyes at the shabby young man who had just seated himself on the other end of the bench. The newcomer paid no attention to him, but drew from his pocket a much-crumpled newspaper and began scanning the "Help Wanted" columns half-heartedly.

Brandon watched him with a gloomy curiosity, also the men at the benches 'round about. He wondered who all these idle men were, and why they were there, and where they came from. Big, strong-looking men—delicate men—young, middle-aged and old men—clean-shaven men in genteel shabbiness, and unkempt men frankly ragged and uncaring. It was a new world to Brandon, and he didn't like it. He was getting an impression of life utterly strange to him. Although he had passed the park times innumerable, and had viewed the motley assemblage there, it had been always without a thought, accepting it all as a matter of fact—hurrying on his way, happy, care-free and filled with supreme egotism. So many things had happened to him since he found it difficult to believe that the secure, self-confident young man who used to speed by in his own six-cylinder car, only two months ago, could possibly have been himself. It was strange—incredible—and yet, true. He rubbed his aching head and wet his parched lips with a furred tongue, then looked ruefully down upon his sadly-mussed and crumpled suit. Surely, it didn't take long for one to begin to look down and out—when one didn't care.

He glanced up to find the young man on the other end of the bench staring at him. There was something coldly critical in the gaze. Brandon resented it.

"What's the matter—don't I look good to you?" he asked with sarcasm, returning the stare.

"Well, you don't look as wholesome as you might," answered Blake. "But that isn't it. It's simply—that you don't belong here."

"Why don't I?" questioned Brandon, trying to be angry, but failing.

The cool, gray eyes glanced him over speculatively. "That tailor-made suit of yours, for instance. And your hat is a special make; also your shoes. There ought to be a pearl scarfpin in your tie, and a simple-looking, very expensive ring on your little finger."

"There was—until yesterday." Brandon rubbed his aching head again. "But is that all—the only reason I don't belong here? Is it just clothes?" He looked out over the crowded benches.

The other shrugged his shoulders. "You'd be surprised to know how many college men are in that bunch. The soup kitchens are full of them. I'm one myself."

The two regarded each other.

"A college education is all right. In fact, it's a mighty good thing," continued Blake, "but it takes something besides. I don't know what it is, but I guess I haven't got it, or I wouldn't be here today. It's easy for the man with a rich dad or uncle to start him out. I had no one." A silence fell. "My old man did that with me," said Brandon finally. "He gave me a managership in one of the big plants, and then kicked me out at the end of six months, and told me to make good on my own account—or go to the devil."

Blake looked at him enviously. "What a chance you had!" he exclaimed. "What was the trouble?"

Brandon flushed. "He didn't like the crowd I was traveling with; said I drank too much and didn't attend to business, and didn't know enough to run a peanut stand; howled around about having wasted a lot of good money on me, and wound up by kicking me out. However, he did give me an alternative."

"What was it?"

"I could either get out and hustle for myself, or take a job as truckman at $18 a week, in the factory where I had been manager. Of course, I got out."

"You're going to have a pretty hard time of it, after what you're used to," said Blake musingly. "I wish I'd had half your chance!"

Brandon was anxious. "Is it so hard, then, to get a job? I haven't even tried—yet."

"Well, it is and it isn't," was the reply. "It's hard to get the kind of work you want, and comparatively easy if you take anything that is handed you—like your truckman's job, for instance. I refused a $10-a-week position this morning. The man said he liked me and would hold it open until tonight, and give me a chance to reconsider. But I'd as soon stay clear down and out as to work for ten hours a day at $10 a week. I don't want a job—I want an opportunity. A college man's time and education ought to be worth it."

Brandon sat staring gloomily into vacancy. Blake picked up the newspaper again, and began idly turning the pages. After a while he came to an editorial and began reading it. He threw it down in disgust and indignation.

"Here's a big editorial writer who makes me tired," he said, again addressing Brandon. "He doesn't know what he's writing about. This slam-bang talk is easy enough to hand out with pen and ink, but it's small consolation to a man who is down and out to be told it is his own fault—that he's a quitter and a jellyfish, and that he lacks grit and punch; that all he needs to do is to put his shoulder to the wheel and batter and beat his way to the top. It's easy," he concluded, "for some fat, well-salaried man to sit down at his desk, at 10 o'clock in the morning, and tell the fellow who punches a time-clock at 7 what to do! I'd like a chance to tell him what I think of him!"

Brandon was idly curious. "I never read his editorials—dad dotes on them." He picked up the paper and perused the editorial, then tossed it aside.

"I'd like to have somebody tell me what I'm going to," he said dismally, "unless I take the governor's advice, and go to the devil!"

Blake had no suggestion to offer. Brandon fell into morose brooding, and Blake to wonder where his supper was coming from. Neither noticed the elderly gentleman who had approached them, until he spoke. He was of a nervous type, small with sparse gray hair, a pallid face and lips faintly violet.

"I hope you boys will pardon an old man's intrusion," he said, in a clear, bell-like voice, "but I happened to be sitting right behind you, behind that pepper tree. I've been hearing what you have been talking about, and am deeply interested."

He stood, looking from one to the other, shyly embarrassed.

"I know what you want, professor," said Brandon good-humoredly. "You want to read us a lecture, and set our feet on the right track—you're dying to do it—I can see it in your eye!" Both Brandon and Blake smiled at the old man's evident confusion.

"I'm willing to listen," said Blake. "I surely would like to have someone solve the problem—it's too much for me."

"Me, too," said Brandon, but the eyes of both were twinkling.

The old man seated himself and his manner hardened a little.

"Really," he began, with just a touch of displeasure, "the situation struck me as serious, and it was a sincere desire to help that caused me to intrude."

Blake instantly sobered. "You're quite right, sir, and no offense was intended. I'm down and out. I haven't had a decent job since I rolled up my diploma and started out to run things. And I can't get one. If you can solve my problem, I shall be only too grateful. I speak for myself," he added, glancing at Brandon.

"You know the mess I've made of things," said Brandon, responding. "If you can tell me how I can get in with the governor again, and get back my managership, I'll be tempted to weep on your neck!"

The old man smiled a little. "In the first place," he said in the same clear tones, "I don't expect either of you to agree with me. But I'm going to speak very plainly. You both talk of being down and out. As a matter of fact, I never saw two young men with better chances!"

"I don't see what you find so encouraging about my prospects!" exclaimed Blake, impatiently.

"Why, my boy," said the old man, "if I had had half your education and one-third your health and strength when I was your age, I would have been something more today than just a doddering old man offering advice to other people! I was sickly and weak as a child, and never outgrew it. It's been a burden all my life, keeping me but half-efficient. But while I couldn't see how to help myself, I could see where others around me were making mistakes, just as I see where you are doing it. You have health and youth and ambition—the best natural advantages in the world to work with. Besides, you have a good education. Now, that is where you have made your mistake. This acquired advantage is but a tool in your hands, to batter down doors closed against you, and you have tried to use it as a password, expecting it to work wonders for you—to be an open sesame, so to speak. You have wanted to jump right in and land on the top round. You have since learned that you cannot do this. It remains with you whether or not you shall profit by the knowledge. Believe me, my boy, the best man climbs up from the bottom! The hard knocks develop him and the experience steadies him. Then when the big thing does come along, he is able to grasp it and hold it!" He paused a moment, then continued. "Ten dollars a week is not much. But it is better than idleness. Idleness will sap a man's efficiency quicker than anything else! Besides, one can never tell what opportunity lurks behind the humblest beginning!"

He looked speculatively at Blake. His words had carried truth, common sense and sincerity. Blake was thoughtfully silent.

The old man turned to Brandon. "What I have said applies in part to you, but you have made the way harder for yourself. You have formed habits you will have to break before they break you. You'll have to learn to work—and to take work seriously. The best thing your father ever did for you was to throw you on your own resources. It's going to give you a chance to prove whether you have the right stuff in you. He took you for granted once, and started you out at the top. You failed. Now he's trying you out from the bottom. If you succeed in being a man, no one will be happier than he."

"You don't know father!" Brandon interrupted dismally. "Once he gets down on you—it's all over with him!"

"You just try him out, and see. That job pushing a truck isn't much, but I'll warrant it will do you more good than half a dozen managerships, at this particular time. Long hours and hard work and clean living will take the puffs away from your eyes, steady your hands, and straighten you out generally. Then when the managership comes again, you will be able to do it credit."

A long pause followed. The old man sat waiting—and disappointed. It was possible his knowledge of human nature had failed him—that here was not so good material as he at first had imagined. He waited another few minutes, then arose wearily to his feet.

Blake, in a brown study, aroused himself, got up also, and dragged off his cap. His eyes flashed with new determination and conviction.

"I've been thinking it over," he said seriously. "My methods have brought me nothing. Your theory is good— I believe I'll try it out!" He extended his hand. The other took it in a firm grip.

"Not theory, my boy—it's fact!"

Brandon stared at him moodily. "I suppose you want me to say I'll capitulate to the governor——"

The old man stood looking down at him quizzically.

The younger got to his feet lugubriously. "All right, professor. I—I guess I'll try it out anyway." He offered a limp hand. The old man grasped it firmly. But he looked very tired and pinched about the lips. He turned and beckoned to a huge, purple car, parked across the street. The chauffeur

The Meddler. By Harriet Crocker LeRoy.

VOCATION CHANGED.

IT WAS just about a year ago that Letty Tarbox came into my house at 9 o'clock one terribly rainy night with a small, suggestive-looking bundle under one arm.

"I've come to stay all night if you'll let me," she began. "Mercy, let me set down quick! I'm about beat out, I've been hurryin' so."

"Why—what—" I said, "has anything happened?"

Letty sank into a chair and laid her bundle on the floor. Then she slipped off the little pink fascinator she had on her head, and drew a long breath.

"Tell me first if I can stay," she said. "If tain't convenient, why, just say so and I'll run back over home and make out somehow."

"Stay? Why, yes!" I said, my hospitable instinct tardily aroused, "I guess you can stay and I'll be glad to have you. But what—"

Letty Tarbox laughed. "Curiosity killed a cat," she said, "but, being a woman myself I know what it is you're sufferin' right this minute!"

She laughed again. "Well," she said, "my house is full. I've put the minister and his wife in the spare bed and Myrtle and Milly and Jamie in my bed and little Jimbo on the couch. My, but he is a cunning youngster, that little Jimbo!"

"Heathenish name for a minister's boy, seems to me," said I.

Letty smiled. "Yes, it does seem so," she said, "but it's just a sort of nickname, you know. His real name is James Boland Wickwire, but somebody shortened it to Jimbo and it sounds kind of cute someway, seems to me."

I felt provoked with myself for my foolishness in thus leading Letty Tarbox away from the main question, but it's one of my bad tricks. I'm always doing it, even when I'm consumed with curiosity to have 'em keep on with the original subject. Seems to me women folks are made queer in lots of ways.

Letty went on: "Yes, they're all over there—the whole family."

"And you let 'em come?" I asked.

"Let 'em!" cried Letty, "I made 'em!"

"Go on," I said, "please go on and talk, Letty; there must be something the matter. The minister and his whole family wouldn't go visiting, a night like this, if there wasn't!"

Letty Tarbox straightened herself, then leaned back in her chair. She folded her good, big, sensible hands in her lap and began to rock back and forth as comfortable as you please.

"Well," she said, "I went over to Sister Wickwire's this afternoon to carry over a mince pie. I knew the children was fond of mince and I'd baked 'em a big one. I had my umbrella, and had pinned up my dress, and had rubbers on, so I didn't get wet. When I got there I found just about the bluest family and most miserable looking surroundings I ever saw. Maybe you don't know how that parsonage roof leaks! It's leaked some for years and this storm it's worse than ever. And the church has put off an' put off a-getting a new roof an' hasn't even patched up the old one.

"There it was, leaking away, the baby's tin bath tub under one spot in the dining-room ceiling and the dish pan under another and the wash basin under another. And Milly, the poor little thing, was crying with a cut finger and Myrtle and Janie whining and fussing over their vaccination—they've just made 'em get vaccinated or stop going to school, you know—and little Jimbo was as cross as two sticks. Sister Wickwire had one of her nervous headaches and her eyes were all red. I saw she'd been crying.

"Brother Wickwire hadn't been crying, but he almost looked as if he'd be glad if he could. I never, no, never in my life, saw such a completely discouraged looking human being as that man!

"I took off my raincoat and hung it in the hall and unwrapped the pie and cut it for the children, then got one of the minister's big handkerchiefs and tied up Sister Wickwire's head and made her lie down on her bed with the door partly closed. It wasn't leaking in there, for a wonder, but it was just about everywhere else. I could hear the drip, drip, drip into tin things out in the kitchen and even in the front room, right near the organ.

"I sat down and looked at Brother Wickwire. 'Well,' I says, 'if the men folks of our church haven't got spunk enough and generosity and pride enough to go ahead and put a new roof on this parsonage. I'll bet the Ladies' Aid 'll do it. We've tackled bigger propositions than that, before now, but I say it's up to the men to do it. It's a man's job.'

"Brother Wickwire gave a deep sigh and leaned his head on his hand. Several times he seemed to be going to say something and then he'd stop.

"Finally he said: 'Sister Letty, I've got to talk to somebody. I'm discouraged; I'm clean beat out! Whipped and beaten and everlastingly discouraged. I'm sick of life, for I know now at last that I'm a failure. Yes, a failure! I mean it. I ain't getting the wages that many a hired man out West can get today. It's no use to ask for any increase—you know that as well as I do. I did ask, six months ago, and they turned me down. I thought then I was worth more—I honestly did—but I know better now. I'm a failure. I've got a wife and four children to provide for, to supply with food and clothes, and make comfortable and happy—and I'm a failure.'

"He stopped and buried his face in his hands. Honest, I thought the man was crying. But the next minute he looked up at me and I didn't like the look in his eyes.

"'Tell me, Sister Letty, you've got to tell me, why can't I make good? Why am I the miserable failure I am? I want to know it from someone else. I want the truth, no matter how it hurts.'

"It did seem for a minute as if my heart would stop beating, for the awful thing that came into my mind to say would be said. It seemed to me I'd as soon die as say it, but I said it.

"'Maybe, you've mistook your calling,' I said. That was all. My jaws clamped together like a steel trap and I couldn't say another word.

"He just sat and stared at me. Then I saw a spark of fire in his eyes and he grabbed the chair arms so tight his knuckles showed white, and leaned forward.

"He just looked at me. Seemed like he couldn't say anything, either. It must have looked like a scene in a moving-picture show—us two settin' there just lookin' at each other, the children out in the kitchen eating mince pie—I could see 'em—and the children's playthings all over the floor, and those wet spots in the ceiling—drip, drip, drip!

"'Sister Letty Tarbox,' he said then, real solemn and slow—his voice sounded almost like it does when he pronounces the benediction—'I can't believe that is possible. When I was converted, twelve years ago, and began to study for the ministry I know there was never a happier young man than I was! I know God's love was in my heart as truly as it can ever be in a human heart. I know I was sincere and honest and my one great thought and desire was to tell the glad tidings to men and women. And I've told it, to the best of my ability. But it's been hard—hard—to be handicapped by poverty like this! My desk, a dry goods box covered with a newspaper, or a corner of the dining-room table. My library, the few books I almost starved myself to buy. This shabby house, these dear ones in it—not always well fed, never well clothed! It's hard for a man to support a family on $50 a montn these days, and it isn't always fifty—either. Sometimes it's less than forty—and these little mouths to feed, these little bodies to clothe. And my wife—you know, Sister Letty, how that little woman has worked!'

"'Yes,' I said, 'faithful and true. She's as good and loving and unselfish a helpmate as any man ever had, and I know it.'

"He reached over and caught hold of my han , gripping it till it hurt. But he didn't say a word—he didn't need to.

"After we had talked a while longer I said: 'Now, I ain't tellin' you to give up preachin' but if you should, what could you do to make a living?'

"A gleam of pride shot up into his eyes. 'I could get a job tomorrow selling automobiles and supplies,' he said. 'It wasn't a month ago that such an opening presented itself to me, it ain't necessary to say just how. But my calling! My life dream of service to my fellow-men, of consecration to God! It would kill me to give it up now. It would brand me as a traitor and a coward!'

"Then I kind of fired up. If anybody had ever dared to tell me that the day would come when I would sass the minister I wouldn't have stood it a minute! And still that's what it must have sounded like. 'Yes!' says I. 'Yes! If you was the only one concerned I wouldn't care if you lived in a tankhouse and eat two meals a day like I knew a young preacher to do once when his congregation wouldn't support him. He sacrificed everything for his dream—his wonderful dream of service to his fellow-man. And I honored him for it, and the day came when he was appreciated at his full worth and paid accordingly, and I do hear he'll be bishop yet without a doubt. But he wasn't a married man. He could suffer the pangs of hunger and cold and loneliness and all that and hurt nobody but himself.

"'Now, I happen to know your miserable little salary won't be raised—I've been looking into it a little and found out—and it's just as you say, it ain't even $50 a month all the time. I know the tight-fisted men in our church. They won't deny themselves the latest farm machinery, nor hired help, nor a piano for their girls. They even have automobiles—there's three right in our church—but they won't pay the preacher decent living wages! How long would a hired man stay with 'em if he wasn't paid in proportion to his labor? They know they've got to pay what a thing's worth when it's something that's connected with their own pocketbook.'

"'That's it!" cries out Brother Wickwire, "that's where it is! I'm not worthy of my hire, even such as it is! Oh, I've been feeling it lately, I've been feeling it! My sermons have been falling off, for I couldn't preach on an almost empty stomach, and with a mind full of harassing cares. I couldn't follow out my thread of thought while all the time my brain was turning over and over the question—"How can I manage to buy the children's shoes?" It's beyond human ability to do it.'

"I felt sorry for him. I had a feeling as though I'd grabbed away a veil and was looking right into a man's naked heart. I felt almost ashamed.

"After a while I said: 'Now, see here. I want you to let me boss this family the rest of this day. I want every one of you to leave this gloomy, leaky house and come over to my house and stay all night. I've got a good fire in the fireplace and there's baked beans and hot brown bread for supper, and after supper the children can pop corn and crack nuts. It'll do you good to have a little change, every one of you. And after we get the children to bed we three can talk things over if Sister Wickwire's headache is better.'

"Just then she came out of the bedroom. She looked at the minister. 'Oh, let's go, dear,' she said. 'I'm so tired of this awful drip, drip, drip! It does seem as though I can't stand it much longer. But Sister Letty, won't it be imposing upon you? Where'll you put us all?'

"I got on my feet. 'It'll be a pleasure,' I says, 'an' I'll tuck you all away somewhere. I'll run over to Sister Wright's and stay over night. She'll let me.'

"Well, in half an hour I had 'em all over there and I tell you it did me good to see 'em act so different. And the way they pitched into that supper! Honest, I don't believe they'd had any tea in the house by the way Brother and Sister Wickwire enjoyed it, and it was a real delight to me to open my very best company preserves and watermelon pickles and grape jelly! I don't know when I've been so happy."

I reached over and patted her big, generous hand where it lay on the chair arm. "I guess you had good reason to be happy, you dear soul, you." I said. "Now you'll sleep right with me tonight. I'm not going to put you off in that cold spare room. I've got woolen blankets on my bed and I have a bad habit of taking the hot water bag to bed with me. I don't know when I've had company to stay over night."

Letty Tarbox reached down for her bundle. She opened it and shook out a generous night gown of pink flannelette, then began to take down her abundant silver-threaded hair.

"You wait!" she said smilingly. "Don't you breathe to a soul what I've told you tonight: but you just wait. If that little woman and those four children don't have good clothes and enough to eat before many weeks I'll miss my guess."

. . . .

Letty Tarbox ran in for a little visit last evening. She brought her tatting and worked while she talked. It's a real pleasure to watch Letty's large, capable hands at their task, and her bright, interested face, and I found myself neglecting my own knitting to watch her.

"Well, it's all turned out splendid, hasn't it?" she said. "My good grief! I didn't think, that dark, stormy day, a year ago, when I went over to Brother Wickwire's to carry the children a mince pie, and found them all in that miserable leaky condition, that my meddlin' would turn out this well!"

I stared at her. "Meddling!" I said, "Letty Tarbox, the very idea of you being a meddler!"

She laughed. "Well, wasn't I?" she asked. "Didn't I go over there, find things all at sixes an' sevens—principally sevens—Sister Wickwire laid up with a nervous headache, the children cross an' cranky, the preacher trying to wash the dinner dishes in almost cold water, the green wood in the stove oozing an' smokin' away without one particle of warmth, and that house leakin' like a colander?

"An' didn't I begin right then an' there to meddle in other folks' business? Kidnaped the whole family, didn't I, even to Jimbo's puppy an' Teddy Bear, an' lugged 'em home to a good fire and enough to eat. And that night after the children had been tucked away in bed I got the preacher to give up his job, didn't I—an' look for another one? One that would give him an' his enough to eat an' wear, and a roof over their heads! I tell you, Mary Ellen, I always thought Brother Wickwire had missed his calling an' I don't know yet as I did wrong to get him to see it too. A man can be just as good a Christian, and do just as much good out on the road sellin' automobiles and feelin' himself a man in the world, able and capable to support them that's lookin' to him, as he can in the pulpit preachin' to a lot of selfish, tight-fisted folks that won't pay him decent wages for his work! He can be a greater credit to his Heavenly Father, seems like to me, if he's able to hold up his head an' look the world in the face an' see his family happy an' comfortable."

She paused and smiled to herself as her bright shuttle flashed in the lamplight.

"Yes, I'm something of a meddler—a female busy-body! You know yourself, Mary Ellen, how I went to the men of the church an' told 'em what's what about that leaky, mossy old roof on the parsonage. Some of 'em didn't like it a little bit, but do you s'pose that fazed me? And we got the new roof too, didn't we? And dear old Elder Brown and his wife are real comfortable now. They're getting along real nice on $40 a month, what with the farm produce an' garden stuff that's sent in to 'em."

"Letty Tarbox," says I, "I believe you're the salt of the earth. You're always talking about the meddling things you do, but you leave the other things to get found out if they can. I guess I know who paid the rent out of her pocket for three months in advance when Brother Wickwire moved into that little new bungalow. And who paid the $50 down at the end of the three months, when he had been raised to $90 a month, and decided he could buy that bungalow on the installment plan."

Letty smiled across at me. "I just loaned it to him," she said, "and he's paid it back. My! I was tickled to death to have it to loan! You know that little dab of money Uncle Enos left me—well, as true as you live I've used that money to help put people on their legs, time an' time again! And I've never lost a cent, an' I don't care if I do lose it if it's helpin' somebody. I call it clear gain any way for I never earned a cent of it myself. Uncle Enos was awful religious, you remember. What do you s'pose he'd say if he knew I'd used some of it to get a preacher to quit preachin' an' go to sellin' automobiles? Uncle Enos hated an automobile worse than poison an' never stepped his foot inside one of 'em. He had a pig run over and killed one day an' the man that was drivin' never stopped!"

Letty neatly pinned the roll of cloverleaf tatting and slipped it into her little silk work bag.

"This is for Sister Wickwire's new baby,"

COMMENT ON THE SITUATION.

With all parties agreed that Italy either is now at war with Austria or will be in the course of a few hours, the attention of the world is again directed toward the Balkan states, whence come rumors that they, too, will soon join in the great war. ITALY'S WAR DATES FROM THIS SUNDAY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 23, 1:15 a.m.—A Stefani dispatch from Rome says: "From May 23 a state of war is declared in the provinces of Sondrio, Brescia, Verona, Vicenza, Belluno, Udine, Venezia, Treviso, Padua, Mantua and Ferrera and the islands and communes on the Adriatic coast, as well as in all the fortresses which may be declared in a state of resistance.

"This proclamation is made by order of the Ministers of War and Marine."

WILSON LIKELY TO PROTEST USE OF GASES IN THE WAR.

BY JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 22.—President Wilson is being urged to send a circular note to the belligerents in Europe protesting against their use of asphyxiating gases in war operations.

It has been pointed out to the President that such a protest would be as greatly in the interest of humanity as was his demand upon Germany to cease submarine attacks upon mercantile craft.

The President has an undoubted right to register an emphatic objection to this new practice, since it is in flagrant violation of a treaty signed at The Hague in 1899 by Germany, Great Britain and other belligerents, as well as the United States. Here is the text of the treaty:

The undersigned plenipotentiaries of the powers represented at the international peace conference at The Hague, duly authorized to that effect by their governments, inspired by the sentiment which found expression in the declaration of St. Petersburg of the 29th November (11th December,) 1868, declare as follows:

The contracting powers agree to abstain from the use of projectiles, the object of which is the diffusion of asphyxiating or deleterious gases.

The present declaration is only binding in the contracting powers in the case of a war between two or more of them.

It shall cease to be binding from the time when, in a war between the contracting powers, one of the belligerents shall be joined by a noncontracting power.

The present declaration shall be ratified as soon as possible.

The ratification shall be deposited at The Hague.

A proces verbal shall be drawn up on the receipt of each ratification, a copy of which, duly certified, shall be sent through the diplomatic channel to all the contracting powers.

The nonsignatory powers can adhere to the present declaration. For this purpose they must make their adhesion known to the contracting powers by means of a written notification addressed to the Netherlands government, and by it communicated to all the other contracting powers.

In the event of one of the high contracting powers denouncing the present declaration, such denunciation shall not take effect until a year after the notification made in writing to the government of the Netherlands, and forthwith communicated by it to all the other contracting powers.

This denunciation shall only effect the notifying powers.

In faith of which the plenipotentiaries have signed the present decla-

ANOTHER AMERICAN SUBMARINE IN AN ACCIDENT IN WAR GAME.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEWPORT (R. I.) May 22.—Another mishap to the submarine flotilla guarding the Atlantic Coast during the war game of the Atlantic fleet was reported tonight when word reached this city that a submarine was aground on the east side of No-Man's Land. The tender Fulton was standing by.

A message stating that the stranded submarine was the K-6 and that her plight was due to a heavy fog, was received tonight from the Fulton.

Capt. Roger Welles, acting commandant of the Narragansett Bay naval station, said the Fulton reported the submarine ashore on a sandy shelf and probably undamaged. The naval tug Uncas was dispatched from here.

No-Man's Land is a rocky islet eight miles south of Gay Head. It is owned by Joshua Crane, Jr., of Boston, the well-known polo and court tennis player, who uses it as a fish and game preserve. Capt. A. W. Hall, the keeper, and his family are the only residents.

Since the Atlantic fleet began its war game at midnight of May 10, two submarines besides the one off No-Man's Land have been in difficulties. The E-2 arrived yesterday with a broken crankshaft, while the K-1 is in port with engine trouble.

MAY RAISE F-4.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Rear-Admiral Moore at Honolulu cabled the Navy Department that today that the submarine F-4, now lies in thirty-two fathoms of water. His message says:

"Total life since salvage began is ninety-six feet. Bank evidently very steep. No hope for success."

ROMAN MOBILIZATION OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Hostile Troops Glaring at Each Other Across the Border Await Orders.

Emmanuel's Consul-General Notified to Leave Munich, but the Ambassadors of Berlin and Vienna Still Tarry in the Latin Capital — General Expectations that the Balkan States will Become Embroiled.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ROME (via London) May 23, 4:01 a.m.—The Giornale d'Italia says that an Austrian patrol has crossed the frontier. The few Germans left in Rome have taken refuge in the Chinese Legation. According to this paper the announcement has been made that Field Marshal von Hindenburg will take command of the Austro-German troops against Italy.

LONDON, May 22.—A Rome dispatch to the Stefani bureau says that the general mobilization of the army and navy, ordered by a royal decree, will begin tomorrow. All vehicles and draught animals will be requisitioned. Ordinary passenger and freight services on the railways will not be disturbed.

PARIS, May 23, 5:03 a.m.—The Havas Agency announces that all communications with Italy were cut at midnight.

ROME, May 22.—All Italy awaits the call to arms. The Ministry has set its face for war and the general mobilization of the army and navy by order of the King probably now is under way.

The Ministers of War and Marine have declared a state of war in the provinces along the Austrian frontier.

While this is not a declaration of war, it is the customary precautionary action taken in a grave crisis.

Thousands of Austrian troops are facing the soldiers of Italy along the frontier. There have been clashes on the border. The barracks of an Austrian regiment at Rovereto, in the Tyrol, has been blown up.

Many Italians reside in that town, and the Austrian authorities are arresting them. Large numbers of Italian residents in Austrian territory are being sent into Hungary.

The Italian Consul-General has been ordered by his government to leave Munich. Austria has asked the United States to take over the charge of Austrian subjects in Italy. It is understood that Switzerland will care for the Germans.

So far as is understood, neither the German nor the Austrian Ambassador at Rome nor the Italian Ambassador at Berlin has left his post, but preparations for a speedy departure were long since completed.

LONDON, May 22, 10:30 p.m.—Only the formal declaration of war is now necessary to complete the breach between Italy and her former allies of the Triple Alliance, and this is expected at any moment.

Should a rupture come, it is not expected that it would have any immediate effect on the battles now in progress, but it would be likely to influence the action of the Balkan states, which have been awaiting Italy's decision.

Rumania, it is reported tonight, has received assurances from Bulgaria that if Rumania decides to join the allies and go to the assistance of Russia by an invasian of Transylvania, Bulgaria will not attack her, and that, in fact, Bulgaria herself is considering the possibility of taking similar action, although her attack would be directed against Turkey.

Greece is also interested in the development, and her efforts, if she should decide to join the allies, would be directed to the Dardanelles and Asia Minor. In these latter theaters of operations, the allies continue their activities and the official report issued today records further progress and confirms the dispatch sent by Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton to Australia that in an attack on the Australian and New Zealand positions the Turks suffered a loss of 7000 men, of whom 2000 were killed.

This report does not mention the operations against Smyrna, but from Turkish and other sources it is learned that the allies are almost as active there as they are on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

There is little or no change in the situation on either the eastern or western fronts in Europe. The Austrians and Germans claim no further progress in their offensive in Middle Galicia and so the British military critics draw the conclusion that the big battering ram which drove the Russians eastward and at some points across the San River, has been brought to a standstill against the bulwark of the Russian reinforcements. Stubborn fighting, however, is still in progress and it may be many days before either side can claim a definite result.

COURLAND.

Mention in the German official report of a cavalry engagement east of Windau indicates that the Germans have landed another raiding force on the coast of Courland, to take the place of the one the Russians drove back just when it was reaching the environs of Mitau. All through this northern region and as far south as the East Prussian frontier, confused fighting continues between widely-separated forces, which ebbs and flows as one side or the other brings reinforcements into the field.

Both British and French claim to have made headway at La Bassee, but the Germans declare that all attacks have been repulsed or that the fighting is still in progress. Apparently the allies are engaged in straightening out their fronts to conform with the positions which they won in recent engagements—a task to which the Germans are offering stubborn resistance with their numerous and cleverly-placed machine guns.

Hydrocianic Acid.

NEW TUBERCULOSIS CURE IS DISCOVERED IN TOKIO.

BY ERNEST W. CLEMENT.

[BY PACIFIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TOKIO, May 22.—Dr. Genzaburo Jega, after more than ten years of research, asserts that he has succeeded in producing an effective specific for the cure of tuberculosis. Its basis is hydrocianic acid, and as it affects only the cause of the tuberculosis it is declared to be harmless to the sufferer. It is asserted that hundreds of patients in the first and second stages of the disease have been cured by Dr. Jega's treatment and are now in good health.

Mines of Poisonous Gases Discharged Against the Germans in Flanders

The Great War.

REPULSE OF THE ALLIES REPORTED BY BERLIN.

French Capture "White Way" Trenches South of Lorette Heights.

Counter-attacks by the Foe Made in the Nighttime are Repulsed, According to the Official Paris Statement. Many of the Invaders are Killed and a Number Taken Prisoners.

[BY WIRELESS AND A. P.]

BERLIN, May 22 (via wireless to Sayville.)—German army headquarters today gave out a report on the progress of hostilities, reading as follows:

"British and French attacks were repulsed yesterday to the southwest of Neuve Chapelle, where considerable English troops were taken prisoners, and on the heights of Lorette. In some places the fighting is still going on. Southwest of Lille and in the Argonne the enemy made use of mines charged with poisonous gases.

"To the east of Windau, in Courland, Russia, there have been cavalry engagements.

"At Shavli, in Kovno province, on the Dubysa River, Russian night attacks were repulsed. Two hundred Russians were taken prisoners. In the southeastern theater of the war there have been no changes of importance."

CAPTURE OF THE WHITE WAY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, May 22, 2:40 p.m.—The French War Office this afternoon issued a report on the progress of hostilities, reading as follows:

"Our troops completed yesterday evening the cleaning up of the trenches known as the White Way, situated to the south of the Lorette Heights. A large number of Germans were killed in the branch lines of these trenches. Others surrendered. The exact numbers are not as yet known.

"During the night the enemy made several counter-attacks. He was repulsed and he suffered heavy losses. All the spur of the White Way is in our hands.

"We have made further progress to the southeast of the Chapel of Lorette. We are at present within 100 yards of the northeast corner of Ablain."

RUSSIA'S REPORT ON OPERATIONS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PETROGRAD (via London) May 22, 11:30 p.m.—The following official communication from general headquarters was issued tonight:

"During the day of May 20 and the morning of May 21 the enemy thrust on the Galician front showed some signs of weakening. In several sectors the enemy adopted a defensive attitude.

"The enemy's artillery also was less prodigal in the expenditure of ammunition.

"On the left bank of the Lower San our troops took the offensive and carried by assault the villages of Krawce, Biercza, Przyszow and Kameraje. They repulsed the enemy's counter-attacks in the direction of Nisko.

"In the salient of the enemy's front on the right bank of the San we carried the village of Ignace on the River Luboczowka.

"In the region of Przemysl there has been no change. East of Sussakow fierce attacks by the enemy continue and the enemy succeeded in carrying part of the trenches held by one of our regiments. In our counter-attacks at this point we made a thousand prisoners.

"On the rest of the Galician front the attacks of the enemy, who have suffered enormous losses, are becoming more isolated in character.

"The principal efforts of the enemy on May 20 were concentrated in the districts between the Rivers Tysmienica and Stry. In the region of Slonskow we captured several hundred prisoners. Two companies of the enemy surrendered near the village of Zovadow.

"On the other sectors along the front there has been no important engagement.

"In the region of Shavli (Courland) we continue to press the Germans on the left bank of the Windau River and Wenta.

"On the Narew front (Poland) the enemy has delivered partial counter-attacks, the object of which apparently was to accustom the troops to the use of poisonous gas.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the enemy is entirely passive. The enemy forces defeated at Opatow are strengthening their positions, receiving reinforcements, which are being sent from beyond the Vistula and Galicia."

VICTORY FOR BRITISH TROOPS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, May 22, 10:35 p.m.—The following official communication was issued by the War Office tonight:

"The British troop have repulsed a strong attack to the north of La Bassee and have inflicted on the enemy heavy losses.

"In the sector to the north of Arras the enemy bombarded our positions violently, but our artillery replied successfully. In spite of this bombardment, we took several additional houses in the northern part of Ablain and made some prisoners.

"We have, on the other hand, brought up short, by our fire, an attempt of the enemy to attack to the north of Neuville.

"On the rest of the front there is nothing to report."

THE WAR IN GALICIA.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

VIENNA (Austria) May 22 (via London, 7:20 p.m.)—Announcement of progress in Galicia was made at the War Office today, as follows:

"Fighting is proceeding in Middle Galicia. The allied troops have maintained the territory gained against all Russian counter-attacks. In slowly progressing attacks we are gaining further ground daily. Along the line of the River Pruth it is generally quiet. At Bojana, east of Czernowitz, hostile attempts to reach the south bank of the river failed with heavy Russian losses.

"In the hill country of Kielce the enemy is again retreating in a northeasterly direction, after obstinate fighting."

CHURCHILL BIDS FAREWELL TO BRITISH ADMIRALTY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 22.—The formation of the coalition Cabinet has taken definite shape, but no announcement will be made until after the Whitsun holidays, Premier Asquith, several of his late colleagues and the Unionists who are to assume office having left for the country after a series of conferences.

Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, whose quarrel with Baron Fisher, First Sea Lord, was largely responsible for the crisis, bade farewell today to the heads of the various departments at the Admiralty. It is said there is a possibility that he will not accept a place in the new administration and that for the duration of the war he will content himself with a seat among the private members of the House.

It is almost certain, however, that David Lloyd George will remain Chancellor of the Exchequer and that Reginald McKenna, the Marquis of Crewe, A. J. Balfour, Andrew Bonar Law, J. Austen Chamberlain and the Marquis of Lansdowne will be included in the new ministry.

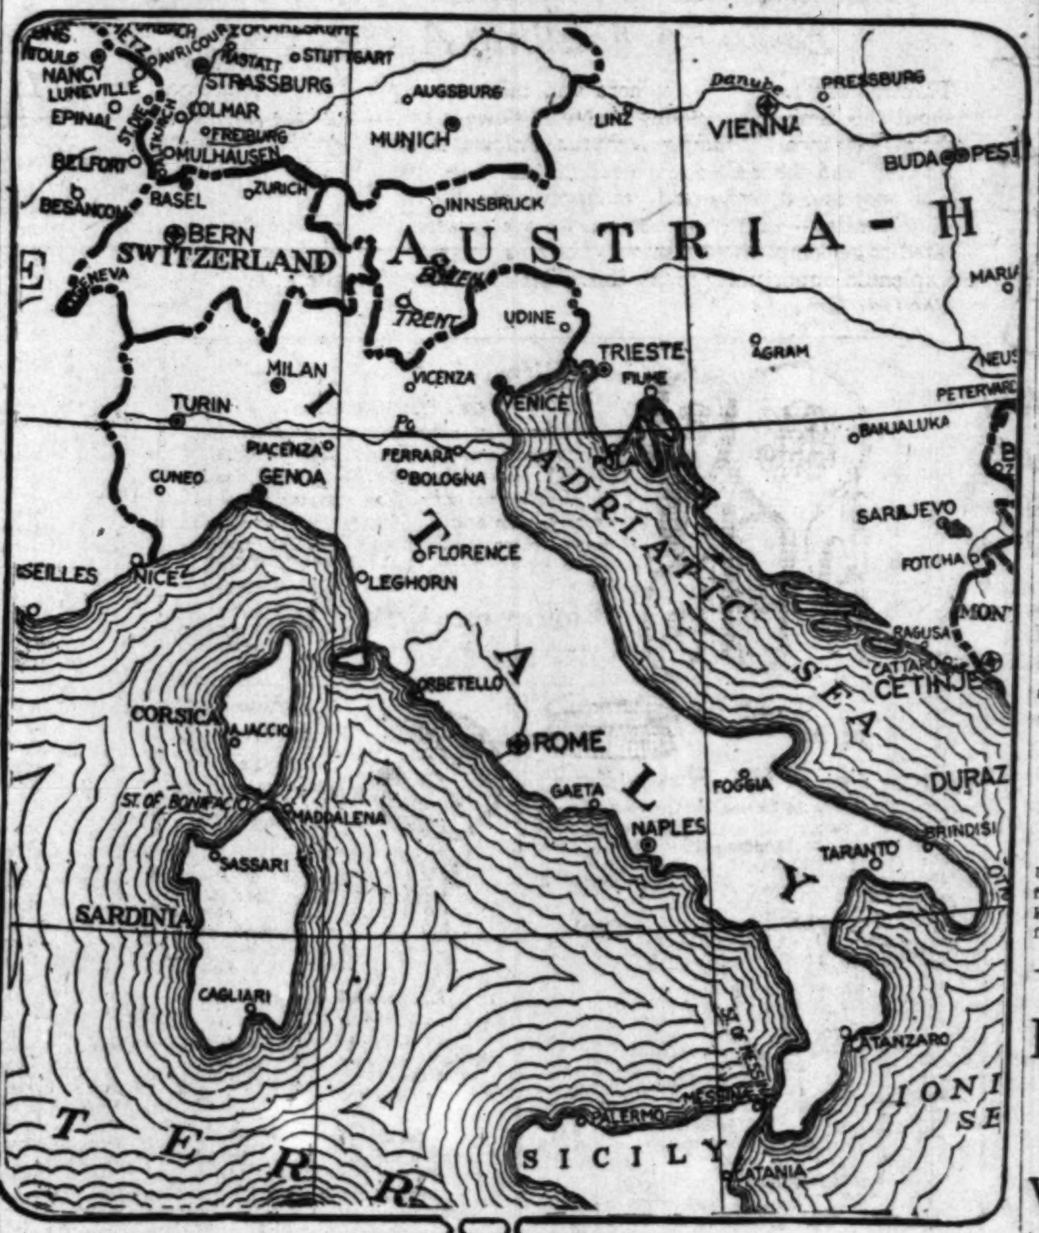
AEROPLANE IN DISGUISE DROPS BOMBS ON PARIS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, May 22.—German aviators flew over Paris at dusk this evening in an aeroplane disguised as a French machine. Because of the disguise the French air scouts allowed it to pass the frontier, believing that it was one of their own aeroplanes.

Flying high over the city, the German aviators dropped three bombs. One of the bombs fell in the Seine close to Eiffel Tower, another on outbuildings of the Bon Marche store, and the third in Rue St. Charles. All three bombs were ineffective and virtually no damage was done. The German aeroplane was driven off by a French machine.

Map of the District where Italy and Austria will Clash.



New names in the war news.

Italy is after a strip of territory on the east coast of the Adriatic and Trent and Trieste. It all belongs to what Italy calls the "Adriatic system." The casus belli between Italy and Austria may be said to be deep rooted in ancient history. The east Adriatic coast was colonized by the Romans, the forebears of the Italians. Then the Turks came along and put out the colonists and held the territory several centuries. About a hundred years ago, in the Napoleonic era, there was a new deal and Italy was worsted, the Italians feel. There are many Italians living in the territory now held by Austria. These and the land they occupy are the "Italia Irredenta" of Roman diplomacy—the Italy "unredeemed," as it were. Italy wants to bring them back home by making their homes a part of Italy.

Misunderstandings.

AMERICA SUSPENDS CONFERENCE WITH BRITISH TRADE ADVISERS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 22.—As chairman of the Congressional committee selected last October to give attention to the subject of cotton exports, Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia issued a statement tonight in reply to the memorandum of the British Foreign Office published Thursday. He declares that the British communication "surprised all familiar with the facts and astonished students of international law."

"At the last session of Congress," he adds, "there was a strong sentiment in favor of stopping the exportation of munitions of war to the allies. Unless this order in council is modified when Congress meets, the exportation of munitions of war will be stopped, and the action by Congress may go much further."

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The determination of the United States government not to recognize or be bound by the provisions of the British order in council, which declared an embargo on all commercial intercourse directly with Germany as well as inward or outward bound through neutral countries, was manifested in several ways today.

The foreign trade advisers of the State Department announced that they had decided to suspend all conference with British Embassy officials here with reference to the informal arrangements which had been in progress not only to assist American cotton exporters in obtaining payment for cargoes detained, but also to secure for American importers American-owned goods now in Germany, contracted for before the order in council went into effect. Secretary Bryan said this step had been taken in order to secure a better understanding with the British government as to the capacity in which the foreign trade advisers were acting.

Ambassador Page at London was instructed to inquire of the British Foreign Office the meaning of the statement made in their memorandum issued on Thursday, that the terms of an arrangement between American cotton representatives and the British government were acceptable to the United States government.

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador here, called on Secretary Bryan during the day to explain that he also had always understood that the United States government was not to be considered as having recognized the British order in council, irrespective of the assistance given the cotton shippers by the foreign trade advisers of the State Department. Some error is understood to have been made in London on the subject.

The decision of the trade advisers to suspend their conferences, however, was reached before the British Foreign Office memorandum was issued and based on differences of a practical character as to the shipment of American-owned goods from Germany through neutral countries, some of which had been contracted for and some of which had even been paid for before the order in council was issued. The text of the trade advisers' statement follows:

> "In view of differences which have arisen in the informal and unofficial conferences between Sir Richard Crawford, the commercial adviser of the British Embassy, and Robert F. Rose and W. B. Fleming, the trade advisers of the Department of State, who have been in a personal capacity representing the importers of the United States, Mr. Rose and Mr. Fleming have decided that they cannot continue these conferences until certain of the difficulties have been removed, and they have therefore made a full report of what has taken place to the Department of State and will await its action."

While officials of the department were reticent concerning the differences referred to by the foreign trade advisers, these are understood to relate to correspondence between British officials and the advisers, offering a plan for the treatment of the American-owned goods. Originally the time limit for the shipment out of Germany of American goods, ordered before March 1, was set for June 1; but the British government announced several days ago that this period had been extended until June 15.

In granting this concession, British officials are understood to have referred to it as a concession to the United States government, and this, as well as other features of the plan whereby American-owned goods were to be shipped through neutral ports from Germany to the United States, were of such a character as to cause the State Department to believe that any acquiescence would be construed as a legal recognition of the British order in council.

Until a different understanding is reached or the plan for the handling of American-owned goods is vitally changed, the foreign trade advisers will not participate in any conferences on behalf of American importers or exporters. Individually, American merchants, of course, can continue their negotiations with the British government either through the British Embassy here or at London.

Cabinet Crisis.

"SHOOT NORTHCLIFFE," DAILY CHRONICLE'S HINT.

BY EDWARD PRICE BELL.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, May 22.—Lord Northcliffe, creator of Great Britain's sensational press, has got himself into uncommonly hot water by his attacks on Earl Kitchener, the Secretary of War. The Daily Chronicle this morning hints that a shooting at sunrise might be proper treatment for his lordship, and the Pall Mall Gazette foreshadows grave measures against him, while other newspapers take a similar line. Meanwhile, Lord Northcliffe remains defiant.

One feels safe in predicting that the government will neither shoot this journalistic peer nor immune him in the Tower of London. It seems improbable also that his principal newspapers, the Times, the Daily Mail and the Evening News, will be suppressed. Conceivably, a mob might wreck his presses and damage the building whence issues his stream of publications—"large, small, plain, colored, cheap, dear, nice, nasty," to quote the Morning Post—but the government, unless I am misinformed, will not violate the freedom of the press by interfering with the Northcliffe crusade. The Cabinet ministers prefer to leave the matter to the public.

In America Lord Northcliffe's symptoms doubtless would be diagnosed as indicating a staggering case of swelled head.

AUSTRIA EXPELS MANY ITALIANS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

UDINE (Italy) May 22 (via Rome May 22, 1:30 p.m., and via Paris, 4:40 p.m.)—The expulsions of Italians from Triest, Pola, Goriza and Gradisca continue by the thousand. None of these persons, however, is permitted to enter Italy; they all being loaded into freight trains and sent to the interior of Austria or Hungary. These forced removals are resulting in much distress.

FAILURE IN DARDANELLES MAY QUIET BALKAN STAT

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Officials and diplomatists here believed tonight that the opening of hostilities between Italy and Austria would not long be postponed and that such delay as had occurred was due to the fact that Italy's military preparations had not been completed.

The possibility of the entrance into the war of Rumania, Bulgaria and Greece continued as a subject of speculation in diplomatic circles. Among diplomatists of the Germanic cause it was suggested that the operations in the Dardanelles within the next two or three weeks would probably have an important bearing on the attitude of the Balkan States. They believed that should the allies ration and affixed their seals thereto.

Done at The Hague the 29th July, 1899, in a single copy, which shall be kept in the archives of the Netherlands government and copies of which, duly certified, shall be sent by the diplomatic channel to the contracting powers.

MAY DEMAND PROOF.

Before making a protest against any belligerent charged with violating the above treaty, the United States would have to satisfy itself that asphyxiating gases have been used in the war. The British government has alleged that in preparation for the operations recently launched against English and Canadian troops at Ypres and vicinity, the Germans developed a chloride gas heavier than air, and shot it through pipes laid for the purpose toward the English and French lines. It is asserted that a large number of allied soldiers were asphyxiated, dying in great pain. Their bodies turned blue and autopsies showed that their lungs were filled with poisonous gas. An English scientist was sent to France to make an investigation. A copy of his report has been furnished to the State Department in Washington. Because of this practice attributed to the Germans, Lord Kitchener made the following announcement a few days ago:

"The Germans have persisted in the use of these asphyxiating gases whenever wind favored or other opportunity occurred, and His Majesty's government, no less than the French government, feel that our troops must be adequately protected by the employment of similar methods so as to remove the enormous and unjustifiable disadvantage which must exist for them if we take no steps to meet on his own grounds the enemy who is responsible for the introduction of this pernicious practice."

HOPE TO END SAVAGERY.

The time has come, in the opinion of some of the President's advisers, when something must be done to bring an end to the savage warfare which has been inaugurated in Europe. Unless steps are taken to confine the belligerents to less cruel methods, there is no telling how far they may go in their efforts to destroy each other. The laws of war forbid the bombardment of unfortified towns and places, yet aeroplanes and Zeppelins, belonging to both sides, have not hesitated to drop bombs, which have killed civilians, including women and children. This government has hesitated to protest on the ground that such attacks may have been purely accidental. It is an extremely difficult thing for operators of air craft to hit the target at which they aim. Usually their bombs fall hundreds of feet away from the military point they intend to aim at.

The Germans have not concealed their purpose to swoop down upon London. If they do so there is danger of a great loss of civilian life. Suppose a Zeppelin were to drop a bomb on the Ritz-Carlton or Savoy Hotel, centers for Americans stopping in the British capital? Undoubtedly, a storm of indignation would sweep over the United States comparable to that which followed the destruction of the Lusitania. This government would be forced to make a demand upon Berlin that such practices cease. Action of this kind, following upon the ing Delegates Guests of the United States.

TO ENTERTAIN PAN-AMERICANS.

s of Commerce will be Principal Topics.

and Business Men to Deliver Addresses.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TON, May 22.—Repre- of all the countries of th and Central America, ada and Mexico, will meet y in the first Pan-Ameri- ial Conference, designed commercial and banking of each to solve the many that confront them as a of the European war. countries accepted the of the United States to ntatives to the confer- delegates appointed from from chief industrial, and financial interests. 200 prominent bankers men of the United States invited to participate. rpose of the conference been strictly defined but, aking, it is expected to problems of transportation, and finance. Secretary who was active in arranging hopes that from it will owledge of conditions and which may lead to those ations between the United her southern neighbors have been the aim of diplomacy.

T LAST SIX DAYS.

onference itself will continue but after its conclusion the will be taken on a tour of the more important Ameri- facturing and commercial Administration officials have effort to insure success for Congress has appro- ,000 to make the visitors the nation. President Wil- retary Bryan, McAdoo and other members of the Cab- oard, of the Federal Re- ard, and members of the corps will attend sessions conference which will begin morning with an address of by the President on behalf United States and another by on behalf of the State Department. One representative of each invited country is expected to respond briefly. At noon, the same day, the President will receive all delegates in the East Room at the White House, and the same night a larger reception will be given in their honor by Secretaries Bryan and McAdoo.

At the outset the conference will be divided into committees and there will be only a few general sessions. There will be one committee for each country and five United States delegates will serve on each. The committees are counted upon to learn the real needs of the visitors and, when they desire, report their findings in an open session to all the others.

SOME OF THE TOPICS.

Although no attempt has been made in advance to lay down a definite programme for the committee meetings, these are among the topics suggested:

The present financial needs in nation, state and local governments; nature and character of public loans; how secured; rates of interest thereon; where such loans have heretofore been place, and the price at which they have been sold; possibility of placing such loans in the United States; effect of the European war on public revenues and expenditures; relation of decline of public revenues to guarantees of payment of interest and principal.

The normal and financial needs of public service companies; present needs of such companies; character and nature of the bonds or obligations they have to offer, how secured, etc.; possible conditions of financing in the United States; effect of the European war on such companies, their financial condition and needs.

Normal financial needs of commerce, such, for instance, as credit facilities; direct or dollar exchange; possibility of adapting commercial credits in the United States to the needs of the countries of Central and South America; effect of European war on the financing of foreign commerce.

Transportation between the United States and the country or countries concerned; improved postal service involved in money orders, parcel post, etc.

Sessions of the conference will be held in the Pan-American Union Building. While the conference is in session the Executive Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States will be in Washington to meet the visitors and give advice or assistance. The "get together spirit" which officials hope to foster will have an opportunity to show itself in full swing at the banquet in honor of the visitors the night of May 29, at which most of the prominent men in diplomatic and official life in Washington will be present.

The delegates will remain in Washington over the next day and then start on a fifteen-day trip which takes them between St. Louis and Boston.

ARRANGEMENTS COMPLETE.

Arrangements were completed tonight for the conference.

Delegates from the eighteen South and Central American countries represented will be kept busy until the last session is held next Saturday and several social functions at which most of those prominent in official society will be present, are on the programme.

The conference began in an informal way today with a reception by Secretary McAdoo to all the delegates who have reached Washington.

According to the official programme there will be six general sessions of the conference. In addition to an address by President Wilson, Secretary Bryan will extend a welcome from the State Department on Monday.

INDEPENDENCE MINE SOLD.

Famous Gold Producer of Cripple Creek Said to Have Been Purchased by the Portland Company.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

COLORADO SPRINGS, May 22.—The sale of the Stratton Independence mine to the Portland Gold Mining Company was reported today from apparently reliable sources. Officials of the Portland company declined to affirm or deny the report, which stated that the sale had been ratified at a meeting this week of the directors of the London syndicate owning the property.

The Stratton Independence was last sold to the English syndicate for $11,000,000, by the late W. S. Stratton.

LIMA (Peru) May 22.—The Peruvian government has appointed Arthur Perez Palacios special commissioner to study for it the exhibits of trade and agriculture at the San Francisco Exposition.

D. L. REABURN IS APPOINTED.

LOS ANGELES ENGINEER MADE SUPERINTENDENT OF PARK AT RAINIER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 22.—Dewitt L. Reaburn of Los Angeles has been appointed temporarily as superintendent of Rainier National Park, according to the assertion today of Superintendent of Parks Daniels. However, according to Daniels, the appointment will be made permanent unless "the people of Tacoma and Seattle get together, eliminate politics and pick a competent man for the place."

Daniels said that former Supt. Sheehan resigned of his own initiative because the condition of his health prevented his attending properly to his duties.

Reaburn formerly was connected with the government as an engineer and was for a time with the Alaska boundary survey, and with the Alaska geological survey. More recently he has been employed by the city of Los Angeles on the Owens River aqueduct project.

All Difficulties in Getting the Submarine to the Surface at Honolulu Believed to be Solved.

[BY PACIFIC CABLE.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) May 22.—Workers engaged in salvage operations on the submarine F-4, submerged outside the harbor since March 26, are confident today that the difficulties encountered in attempts to raise it have been solved. This opinion was expressed as a result of yesterday's work when the hulk was raised four feet. It now rests at a depth of 192 feet. The submarine has been shifted inshore a distance of 500 feet the last four days. If this rate is kept up officials in charge of operations say it will be possible to have it in dry dock at the end of four days.

First Law Regulating Five-Cent Fare Automobiles is Operative in the Empire State.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ALBANY (N. Y.) May 22.—New York State's first law regulating 5-cent-fare automobiles became operative today, when Gov. Whitman signed the Thompson bill, placing them under the jurisdiction of public service commissions and municipal authorities.

TWO MILLIONS FOR CARS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, May 22.—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company announced today that it had placed orders for 189 all-steel passenger and baggage cars to cost approximately $2,000,000, the cars to replace wooden equipment.

THE WEATHER BACK EAST.

Sunshiny and Warm with Substantial Rains Reported on the Atlantic Seaboard—Freezing in Mountains.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 22. — Sunshine and warmer weather prevailed over most of the Middle West today, the first time in several days. Southern Illinois, Ohio, Southern Indiana, Missouri and Arkansas had rain. Chicago's maximum was 62 deg. Eastern States are warmer and all report substantial rains. North Dakota and some of the Mountain States still show the freezing point at night, but the rest of the country appears safe. Other temperatures:

Heroic Nurses and Doctors Work Night and Day.

BY WILL IRWIN.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 30.—That was one of the days when the city of the wounded ran full. It was one of those days in the midst of battle when the issue stands at balance and the timorous think on defeat. Strange rumors, both hopeful and hopeless, filled the civilian quarters of the city. All we knew for certain was that the French territorials in the midst of the allied line, near Ypres, had broken and fallen back before the deadly chlorine gas, and that the Canadians, in one of the tightest pinches which an army ever met, were trying to hold—were trying even to advance.

Wounded Canadians were pouring in on every train. Through the varied accents of the British army—North Irish, South Irish, peasant Irish, gentry Irish, Highland Scotch, Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Lancashire, Yorkshire, cockney, Oxford, Welch—ran like a thin, hard silver thread the accent of the North American Anglo-Saxon.

As I passed along the road toward the Casino the motor ambulances were gliding slowly and in order down the wide, gravelled driveway. The "sitting cases" on the front seat with the driver wore mostly the maple-leaf insignia of Canada. One by one the ambulances drew up at the grand marquee, where ladies of fashion, dressed in the latest frivolities of Paris, used to pass and repass only eight brief months ago. From the great doorway where liveried servants used to bow in the visitor during that incredibly remote period in a dead past of the world stepped men in the invariable khaki—quiet moving, silent, businesslike men.

With incredible swiftness and yet incredible delicacy they drew out the stretchers from the racks, slipped the handles into the loops of their harness and carried them in. The figure on each stretcher was wrapped tight in an army blanket. The face which peered forth from the top of the blanket roll was always saffron pale, except when it was bound about somewhere with a white bandage or was discolored by powder marks. There was never much expression in these faces even when the men had their eyes open. Mostly, they looked merely patient.

GROANS IN THE HALL.

I was in the entrance hall now, a hall once green with palms, quivering with distant music, fragrant with strange French perfumes. It was stripped bare; only its garish wall decoration remained. For perfume there was only a scent of drugs and mortification. A distant sound quivered on the ear. It was the composite sound of many groans, kept low with all the will power of soldiers who are trying to suffer in silence, and the more poignant for all that.

A way had been kept clear to the door of the great baccarat-room of the Casino; otherwise the floor was covered with rows of men on stretchers, all wrapped up and ticketed. These were the "safe" cases, the men out of danger but yet badly wounded, who were going back to England to recuperate. These were not suffering. The prevailing expression of a great patience was lighted by a kind of expression of relief— and here and there one turned his head toward his comrade on the next stretcher and ventured a feeble joke.

I stepped, then, within the door—and before me lay the tragedy and the contrast of war. It was a great, high room, lined with great mirrors, decorated with highly-colored nymphs and cupids. From the center of the ceiling hung an immense chandelier with a thousand glass crystals. Here but eight months ago the overdressed dolls of Europe used to squander the wealth of Europe, while scented dandies leaned over them to watch the play. The dolls were gone now, transformed into women by grief, and poverty. The dandies were dead, or had become bearded "poilus," wallowing in the filth of the trenches.

COTS PACKED TIGHT.

And the wounded, the grievously wounded, lay thick as shingles on a roof along the great floor. The cots were packed so tight that one must edge his way to get along the aisles. More than that—they had been coming in so fast that afternoon as to strain all resources of the hospital. The newly-arrived, still on their stretchers, had been stowed away in the interstices between the cots.

They lay, mostly, very quiet. Some of the more grievious wounds of the legs and the body you could not see because they were covered by the blankets. Here and there was a head swathed to twice its size. From these bunches of bandages would peer out a single blackened eye—in three cases out of four a wound in the head produces that effect as surely as a direct blow. From the nearest cot to the door there rose beside a pale and unwounded head a hill of white bandage and gauze. It covered a set of shoulder-muscles torn clean away. By the far door a man with a bandaged head looked steadily at a red cotton handkerchief, which he turned and fumbled in his hands. No intelligence shone in his eyes. There were masks, too—ghastly white masks of muslin, with slits for the mouth and eyes.

MAN WAS DYING.

In the center of the room, and just where the croupier used to call the odds and the winnings in the days of the ancient world, lay one who was dying. As I first looked at him I thought indeed that he was dead. You had to watch to find the faintest flutter of breath. Where his hands had been were white cotton bags. The shells which tore his chest did that. Close against his cot lay two men on stretchers. Neither moved nor spoke nor seemed to pay the slightest attention to him, except that they lay with their faces turned away. As I looked one of the nurses, speeding about upon their quiet feet so fast that their white veils floated out behind them, stepped up to him and looked. She summoned with a gesture another nurse. She also looked and nodded. They were small, frail-looking English women; yet without fuss or hesitation they picked up the two laden stretchers to right and left of his cot and deposited them gently beside the next row. They brought out then a set of red screens and with them surrounded the cot. In the wards they grant privacy at least to death. From that time forth I could catch now and then the bobbing of a white headdress above the screen as the nurse worked to ease the passing soul.

"Poor bye, I thought he'd go," said a voice behind me in a half whisper.

COMMENT OF SOLDIERS.

I turned. Two soldiers, looking almost healthy by contrast with the others, sat up in bed, their backs braced against a gilded mirror frame and watched the screen with curious eyes. As soon as the first one opened his mouth I knew that he was Irish, just as the first words of the second betrayed the fact that he was Scotch. One was of the Dublin Fusileers and the other served in the Ninth Royal Scots—the "Dandy Ninth" of Edinburgh. As soon as my eye caught theirs I knew that they wanted to talk. It is a monotonous business, this lying in a hospital, with most visitors barred by the army rules. When a man has energy to spare from the task of just keeping alive he welcomes company. I have had them call to me from across the ward, begging for a few moments of conversation.

Now the next thing you will not understand unless you have lived in a state of war. With a man dying over there, the Scot, the Irishman and I found ourselves in a minute conversing softly, but intimately and cheerfully, over those matters which most concern a wounded man—first his wound and second how he got it. That is the way of war, the only possible way. Don't recognize hard facts unless you must. That is why the men in the trenches are just now the most cheerful people in Europe.

BOTH "LEG CASES."

They were both "leg cases." The Scot's was a flesh wound. It would have been slight, once upon a time. But those German bullets cut queer capers. At least half the flesh wounds nowadays are clean-drilled little holes at the point of entrance and wicked gaps at the point of departure. I imagine that these bullets, shot from worn rifling, are "keyholing," although the British soldier often has less charitable theories. The Scot had only a passing mild story to tell. He had got his wound on the way to the trenches, in one of those avenues of approach which the Germans sprinkle nightly from rifles fixed in a vise and trained on a spot like a cannon. Thence the dressing station, the transfer to the field ambulance, the train journey down to the base hospital—and finally this haven.

"I slept twelve hours when I came in," he said; "eh, but sheets were gude!"

As for the Irishman, he had much to tell—a story which he brought out in his own original fashion, with many divigations and philosophical comments on things military. He "got his"—that is the conventional phrase—in a charge, just after the French broke from the gas fumes. He put in here a pretty piece of description of a group of Zouaves seen here and there by their bright uniforms which glanced through the greenish-yellow haze of chlorine gas. Each time he saw them they were further back—and each time there were fewer men in the group. A bullet caught him as he charged, and down he went. He described the sensation as most wounded men do—a blow, a momentary blur, a burning, and then the pain. The R. A. M. C. men, who follow in and pick up the wounded, were not at hand. In his charity and pride in the army, he stopped to defend them for that. The work that day was too hot for any ambulance corps.

EFFECT OF SHRAPNEL.

"They cudn't see us all," he said. Thence, with the shrapnel peppering his road, and with virulent hornets singing overhead, he had dragged himself back to a pile of brush and managed to put on his first-aid dressing. Here he digressed. He had found a dead German and had looked through his pack. That pack seemed to fascinate him more than anything else about the battle. He kept returning to it. The dom thing was black, and it opened from the bottom. He never saw a pack like that before. There were many letters in it, but they were "all in Dootch." He kept them and gave them to the surgeon afterward—there were orders to turn in all the writings found on German corpses or prisoners. Also, there was a ration; and since he had not eaten since morning, he took that. "The biscuits was bigger than ours, sir, but soft. They was aisier chawin.'" Just when his story reached a proper climax he would return to that interesting pack.

I made out that he despaired at last of being found and that he made his own way back on his shattered leg to the field ambulance. But he had not reached his turn with the surgeons when a shell came through the roof. Then came another—they were marked and doomed. The ambulance force loaded up the wounded and hurried to a barn further back from the lines. It was late at night by now. When he woke in the morning he found the man who lay next to him dead. Thence they got him to the train, and there was no more to his adventure but hospital routine. "Did yer ever see wan of thim German packs?" he asked in conclusion. "This felly had some little wads like gocm. I don't know what they was for."

HOBBY GERMAN SPIES.

The Scot broke in from time to time with his slow, wholesome accent. His hobby appeared to be German spies, which he had seen behind every tree. If he was running the army like Sir John, he said, he wouldn't have a civilian within ten miles of the lines. Also, he had much to tell of the asphyxiating gas. That started the Dublin fusileer again. First begging my pardon, they described its effects, strophe and antistrophe, in language quite unfit.

"Rest his sowl!" said the Irishman suddenly. I glanced up. The nurses were leaving the inclosure made by the red screens. One of them, with a gesture, summoned an orderly. While we had been talking the soul of the man with his hands in bags had set sail into the quiet ocean of unnumbered souls.

So they let me wander. I have a hospital pass, but usually they stop me at the very door to demand it of me. Today no one had time for that. A young Scot lay tossing. I stood beside his bed. A nurse came speeding up, a very slight English girl, her face drawn with weariness. She never glanced at me as she bared the soldier's arm and pricked it with the needle of a little syringe. I doubt if she realized that I was there at all, so intent was she on business. But weary, desperately weary though she was, she never lost that cheerfulness which is drilled into her profession nor that mother attitude toward the childishness of man which is inborn in woman.

ADVICE OF NURSE.

"Now don't fuss, my boy," she said. "This will ease you, and when you wake up we'll be starting you back to Scotland. From Dundee? Dundee is a fine city. Let me tuck the blanket under you." A hand reached out from the next cot—this man was a little delirious—and clutched. She evaded his hand, and she quieted him also with her easy, musical English voice,

"I will be glad to state the only principle upon which I think a man is justified in opposing an officer of the law. If his life is immediately in danger and if he feels that the situation is such that when he is brought before a court of justice to defend his action the circumstances will lead to his acquittal, then I think he is justified in resorting to violence."

When Mr. Rockefeller left the stand, Ivy L. Lee, publicity agent for the Rockefeller interests, who followed him, declined to answer questions as to whether he wrote public statements appearing under Mr. Rockefeller's name, and Chairman Walsh said that the commission would take up later the question of compelling him to reply.

THE AMMONS LETTER.

Mr. Lee was asked to explain the suggestion that Gov. Ammons of Colorado write a letter to President Wilson to clear up facts regarding the strike. Lee said that Maj. Edward J. Boughton of Colorado had conferred in New York with Mr. Greene, formerly director of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. Boughton, he said, was sent to New York by Gov. Ammons, who was anxious to get the facts more adequately before the public. Lee said he suggested to Boughton, through Greene, that the Governor write a letter to President Wilson and the Governors, setting forth the situation as he saw it.

Boughton suggested that Lee give a memorandum suggesting what kind of letter would do good.

"Good to whom?" asked Walsh.

"Good for the general cause," said Lee.

"A memorandum was drafted," Lee said, but Maj. Boughton informed him later that nothing further was done with it.

MAN WHO ESCAPED SAN QUENTIN GETS OUT OF SAN RAFAEL JAIL WITH A PAL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN RAFAEL (Cal.) May 22.—John Bogden and Henry A. Young, both held for trial for their recent escapes from San Quentin Prison, escaped today from the Marin County Jail. Two bars were sawed out of a window in a corridor where the men were sent for exercise. It is said to be Bogden's thirteenth escape from jail.

Bogden, it is said, repeatedly boasted that he would escape from jail before he could be placed on trial.

Both men were brought to the County Jail after their capture, to be tried. Young's trial was to have been set Monday. Bogden was serving a sentence of fourteen years for burglary, committed in Yolo county. He escaped from San Quentin Penitentiary recently and was captured in Sacramento.

Young was serving a sentence of five years for a burglary at Los Angeles. He escaped from prison disguised as a woman. He eluded capture for several days.

Catastrophe.

FOUR HUNDRED CASUALTIES IN ENGLISH TRAIN WRECK.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 23, 4:05 a.m.—One hundred and sixty-four soldiers, apart from civilians, were killed in the disastrous railroad wreck at Carlisle, yesterday morning, according to a press dispatch from that city.

CARLISLE (Eng.) May 22.—Three trains collided at 6 o'clock this morning on the Caledonian Railway at Gretna, near this city, causing the death of probably 175 persons and injury of many others. The total casualties probably will reach 400. Fire in the wreckage added horror to the scene.

One train was a troop train, another was a local and the third the express from London to Glasgow.

Assistance arrived quickly. Firemen, after getting the flames under control, joined in extricating the dead and wounded. The adjoining fields soon had the appearance of an immense mortuary.

The dead mostly are soldiers. The troop train collided first with a local from Carlisle and before the occupants were able to get clear of the wreckage of this accident the London-Glasgow express crashed into them. Locomotives and cars, shattered and splintered, were hurled about in confusion.

A fire was soon burning so fiercely that rescuers were driven back. Before the fire was put out many travelers, pinned under the wreckage, were burned alive.

Five hundred men of one regiment were on the troop train. When the roll was called after the wreck only fifty-two officers and men responded. Numbers of others, however, were engaged in caring for their wounded comrades.

Some of the victims were so mangled that their rescue from the wreckage was impossible. Several others who were extricated died soon after. Doctors performed heroic services. One physician, Dr. Edwards, responded to the appeals of two soldiers who were imprisoned by the legs. Facing the scorching flames, he amputated both legs of one soldier and one leg of the other. One of the soldiers died from the shock.

By 5 o'clock this afternoon seventy-three bodies had been recovered from the wreckage.

MOBILIZATION BEGINS TODAY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ROME (via Paris) May 23.—General mobilization will begin Sunday. The Ministers of War and Marine have proclaimed a state of war in the Italian provinces bordering on Austria, in the islands and cities along the Adriatic coast, as well as all the fortresses, which will be declared in a state of defense.

The foregoing dispatch confirms the dispatch from Rome through the Stefani Agency which was received earlier from London.

Balance of Power.

THE GERMAN ANALYSIS OF ITALY'S CONDUCT.

[BY WIRELESS AND A. P.]

BERLIN, May 22 (by wireless to Sayville.)—The Overseas News Agency today gave out the following:

"The Norddeutsche Algemeine Zeitung, giving a history of the Italian crisis, says Italy's reason for participating in the war is not, as pretended, because Austria-Hungary attacked Servia. Italy demanded compensation on the ground that the terms of the Triple Alliance provided for this in case of a change in the balance of power in the Balkans. Austria-Hungary and Germany accepted the Italian interpretation of the treaty without direction and opened negotiations with a view to compensating Italy, conceding several of the Italian claims.

"Suddenly on May 4 Italy advanced the pretense that the Triple Alliance had been broken by Austro-Hungarian aggression against Servia, thus contradicting her own statements, which formed the basis for the negotiations. On May 10 Austria-Hungary offered still larger compensations, which the German Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, announced on May 18 in the Reichstag. The newspaper concludes:

"'If Italy takes up arms against the Teutonic allies it will be for the purpose of obtaining by breach of faith what could have been obtained without bloodshed.'

"Berlin newspapers refer to a paragraph in Premier Salandra's statement declaring that Italy after May 4 could not remain isolated. This, they say, shows the real reason for Italy's present attitude.

"The Italian Socialist Daily, Avanti, repeated the declaration that a majority of the Italian nation is against war. It reports that Italian reservists in trains going to Milan publicly protest against war."

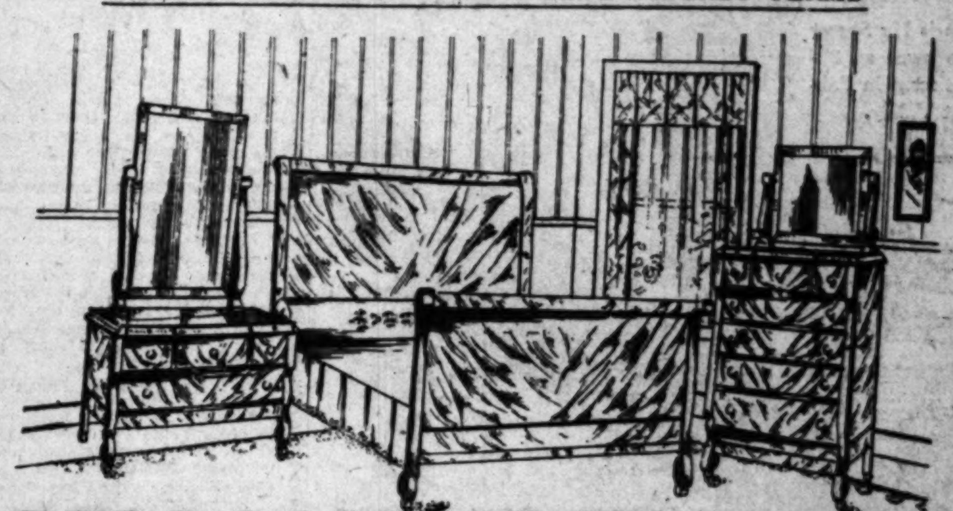
YOUR HOME FURNISHED COMPLETE ON EASY TERMS



BEDROOM SUITE $99

In Circassian Walnut or Birdseye Maple
(Pay $9 Down, $9 Month)

You will find only the best of materials and workmanship in this fine suite—if you want to save money on goods of exceptional quality this is surely your opportunity.

THE DRESSER

This fine dresser has a large top with convenient small drawers for jewelry, etc. One drawer opens with a secret catch and is a good hiding place for valuable jewels, papers, etc. The mirror is large in correct proportion and of heavy beveled French plate. Notice the row of three top drawers.

THE BED

Matches the dresser and chiffonier perfectly, as it is turned out by the same factory, one of the largest makers of exclusive bedroom furniture in the world. It is an almost exact copy of the famous bed used by the Great Napoleon in his palace at the Tuileries, France.

THE CHIFFONIER

Matches the dresser and bed, both in design, color and finish and has the same jewel drawers and three top drawers for collars, etc. The body, while necessarily smaller than that of the dresser, is larger than most chiffoniers and has more drawer space.

THE STYLE

The design, which is faithfully carried out in each piece of the suite, is known as "Empire" or "Colonial" and is an adaptation of the style in vogue during the reign of Napoleon. Later, this style of furniture was brought to America and hence derived its name of "Colonial." It is classic in its character and will always be in good taste and used in the most luxurious homes.

Gentlemen: I came here with just $1100 July 12, 1912, and today I am worth $6000, and it won't be very long until my farm and stock will be worth $10,000. I have 80 acres of which I am very proud. I came here from the mining country without any farming experience, and I have succeeded right from the start. I have made a good living, have materially increased my net worth and have real money in the bank.

I threshed 4000 bushels of Turkey Red wheat and have received the highest price for oats in this section. I got 109 bushels of oats to the acre. I have raised more than five tons of sugar beets from less than a quarter acre. I sowed the land broadcast, gave it no care at all and watered it only once. I positively believe that with a little care my land will produce 30 tons of high-grade sugar beets to the acre. I am going to plant sugar beets and make money.

Alfalfa here is the best I have seen anywhere. I can show a hog on my place that weighs over 400 pounds and he hasn't been given a mouthful of feed; he has just foraged around for himself. This is the easiest hog-raising country on earth. The reasons are: High elevation, dry climate, abundant sunshine, no hog cholera, pure water and cheap feed. Hogs practically take care of themselves here. My experience with dairy cows has been more than satisfactory. The soil is right, the climate is delightful. I can work outdoors in my shirtsleeves with comfort every day in the year except when it rains. I cannot recommend the Pahvant Valley country too highly.

Pahvant Valley is on the main line of the Salt Lake Railroad in Southwestern Utah—under $1,000,000 irrigation system. Estimated annual cost of maintenance from 40 to 50 cents per acre.

$70 Per Acre for Land and Perpetual (Gravity) Water Right. $25 An Acre Down. Balance in 10 Years.

Practical farmers from nearly all of the Western States have located in the Delta district of the Pahvant Valley because:

(1.) They found rich land with perpetual gravity water right at only $70 an acre, that produces big money-making crops with unfailing regularity.

(2.) A $1,000,000 irrigation system that provides perpetual water insurance at an estimated annual cost of 40 to 50 cents per acre, is a water opportunity that may never occur again.

(3.) An irrigation system that the State has been willing to officially approve, and also limit rates at which the water rights shall be sold, is a golden asset as stable and enduring as the government itself.

Pahvant Valley is the last word in richness and depth of soil, cheap water supply, main-line transportation facilities, ready markets, health-giving climate, pure, soft lithia drinking water, money-making crops, stock raising advantages, and happy, contented farmers. Our booklet, "Sworn Statements by Pahvant Valley Farmers," will be mailed upon request. Special excursions at low homeseekers' rates from Los Angeles.

Makes Life Worth Living

Peruna produces a vigorous appetite. Clean tongue. Splendid relish of food. Good digestion. Makes life worth living.

Peruna generally regulates the bowels without producing the action of physic. Just a regular and natural condition. Yes—it makes life worth living.

Business men, professional men, clerks and employees that are tied to the desk many hours every day. Fagged out. Played out. Life getting stale. The tonic Peruna is the remedy. It will do wonders. In short, it makes life worth living.

Good housekeepers look out for the welfare of the family. Not only to cook their food, but to prevent and cure the petty ailments that are liable to come up every day. Peruna is a reliable standby on such occasions.

Coughs, colds, grip, ordinary sore throat, loss of appetite, irregular bowels, imperfect digestion, for all these and many other small ailments of everyday life, Peruna is the remedy.

There are those who prefer tablets to fluid medicines. Peruna can now be obtained in tablet form, convenient to carry in the pocket.

DECLINES OFFER TO MAKE SHELLS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BATTLE CREEK (Mich.) May 22.—C. E. Kolk, president of a local manufacturing concern, has refused an offer from an European country for shrapnel shells, it became known today. The order, if accepted, would have amounted to about $3000 a day for an indefinite period.

"I could not sleep easy with the thought that the product of our plant was murdering boys in Europe," said Mr. Kolb. "If the United States wanted the shrapnel, we would make them."

GERMAN SHIP IN NEW BERTH.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SEATTLE, May 22.—The German ship Steinbek, which was loading lumber at Bellingham when the war broke out and which was interned there, was towed today to Eagle Harbor, near Seattle, and berthed close to the Hamburg-American liner Saxonia. The new quarters are preferred because further from the British border.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 22, 2:34 p.m.—The London county council, to deal with the strike on the municipal tramway system, ordered today all employees of military age who are eligible for service in the army or navy to surrender forthwith their uniforms and badges. Only men above military age will be employed during the remainder of the war.

BRITISH SHIP SUNK BY GERMANS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

BEREHAVEN (Ireland) May 22.—The British sailing ship Glenholm was sunk yesterday by a German submarine fifteen miles off this port. The members of her crew have been landed here.

The Glenholm was on her way from Chile to Liverpool with a cargo of nitrate. The submarine intercepted the sailing ship and signalled the crew to abandon her. The ship was then sunk, the submarine firing thirty-nine rounds from her gun before she went down.

Berehaven, or Castletown Barhaven is on the southern coast of Ireland, on the north shore of Bantry Bay. The point where the Glenholm was sunk is roughly not more than sixty miles from Old Head of Kinsale, where the Lusitania went down.

The Neal Treatment for Drink Habit

Is the Best Because It Is an Internal, Purely Vegetable, Safe Treatment and Because It Saves Time.

If the Neal Treatment for the drink habit had no other advantage, the fact that drinking men can take treatment at the Los Angeles Neal Institute, 945 South Olive street, or at home, and be through with it at the end of the third day, and return to business, is such a valuable saving of time compared with the old twenty-eight to forty-two days' hypodermic injection treatments, that there is really no comparison. To business and professional men four to six weeks away from business is a serious matter. To take the Neal Treatment means a saving of many dollars, depending upon how valuable your time is. Three days spent at the Neal Institute or at home, taking the Neal Treatment can be arranged by the busiest of men who can return to work on the fourth day without their absence having occasioned an inquiry except a possible comment as to how well they are looking. Scene during an advance.

The fighting on and around Hill 60 in France gives point to this picture. The order for the advance has been given and the men are scrambling from the trench. A certain number of men carry forward with them bundles of a dozen sandbags with which to reconstruct the captured German trench, for as soon as occupied the new position has to be reconstructed on its rearward face in order to present the necessary protection and loopholes. The sand bag men work like demons in order to secure cover for their comrades with the least possible delay. This drawing has all the accuracy that personal observation conveys.

FAITH BROKEN BURIAN CHARGES

Gives the Austro-Hungarian View of Italy's Course.

"Painful Surprise" in Vienna Over New Situation.

Foreign Minister Divulges Secrets of Concessions.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

VIENNA, May 22 (via London, 6:45 p.m.)—Baron Stephen Burian von Rajecz, the Austro-Hungarian Minister for Foreign Affairs, handed to the Italian Ambassador today a note expressing "painful surprise" at the decision of Italy to "put an end in such an abrupt manner to the treaty which was based on the community of our most important political interests; which has guaranteed security and peace to our States for so many years and which has rendered Italy meritorious services."

The note says the astonishment of Austria-Hungary is more than justified as the Italian government repeatedly announced its wish to maintain, and even to strengthen, the bonds of alliance between the two countries.

Baron Burian von Rajecz repeated that the object of the ultimatum to Servia was purely and simply to protect the monarchy against the revolutionary machinations of Servia and that this aim could in no way affect the interests of Italy.

ITALY'S NEUTRALITY.

When the conflict assumed a European character Italy proclaimed her neutrality without "throwing out the slightest suggestion that this war which was provoked by Russia and prepared so long beforehand, could be of a nature to deprive the Triple Alliance of its raison d'etre," and "made no communication which could justify the belief that it regarded the proceedings of Austria-Hungary as 'a flagrant violation, both in letter and in spirit, of the alliance and treaty.'"

The Cabinets of Vienna and Berlin, even though deploring Italy's resolution to remain neutral, "a resolution, which, in our view, was hardly compatible with the spirit of the treaty, nevertheless loyalty admitted the view of the Italian government and an exchange of views which then took place established, unaltered, the maintenance of the Triple Alliance."

Under Article VII of the treaty Italy presented claims which aimed at securing compensations in the event of Austria-Hungary obtaining advantages from the war, territorial or otherwise, in the Balkan peninsula.

AS TO COMPENSATIONS.

Austria-Hungary accepted this standpoint and declared herself ready to submit the question to examination, at the same time pointing out that so long as to the eventual advantages according to Austria-Hungary remained unknown, it would be difficult to fix such compensations.

Baron Burian von Rajecz contended that Italy shared this view, as was shown in the declaration made by the late Marquis Antonio di San Guiliano, dated August 25 last year, in which the then Italian Foreign Minister said that "it would be premature to speak of compensations."

Nevertheless, Baron Burian continues, Austria-Hungary always has been ready to begin conversations on the subject and when Italy made her demands Austria-Hungary accepted even this as a basis for negotiations, although, in its opinion, Article VII of the treaty never referred to the territory of the treaty-bound parties, but related purely and simply to the Balkan peninsula.

While it was impossible to accede to all the demands, Austria-Hungary, with a sincere desire to reach an understanding, made sacrifices which were only justified by "a desire to uphold the alliance existing for so many years to the common advantage of both countries."

Replying to the Italian objection that the concessions offered by Austria-Hungary were only to be realized at an indefinite time, namely, at the end of the war, Baron Burian says that Austria-Hungary was ready to offer all necessary guarantees for the purpose of preparing for this transfer and insures "its even being carried out at no distant date."

In conclusion the note says:

"The royal Italian government in an arbitrary manner has disburdened itself of all its obligations, and the Austro-Hungarian government declines responsibility for all the consequences that may arise from this procedure."

Baron Sidney Sonnino,

The Italian Foreign Minister, is one of Italy's big men. He has long been known as the framer of Italian cabinets. He has twice been Premier and has been associated with the government since 1867, having entered the diplomatic service when he was only 20 years old. He was born in Pisa in 1847 and has never married. In 1865, he was graduated from the University of Pisa with the degree of L.L.D. Two years later he entered the diplomatic service and remained in that department for five years. In 1880 he was elected to Parliament. The Baron was Minister of Finance from December, 1893, to April, 1894. Then for two years he was Minister of the Treasury. In May, 1906, he became Premier and Minister of the Interior. In 1909, he was again appointed Premier. Baron Sonnino has written much on politics.

HOLD M'CUNE FOR TRIAL.

Wealthy Son of a Salt Lake Man Charged With Using the Mails to Defraud in the East.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 22.—Raymond McCune, son of A. W. McCune, of Salt Lake City, reputed to be wealthy, was held today in $20,000 bail for examination June 12 on a charge of using the mails to defraud citizens of Wilmington, Del., and other cities, in connection with investments in gold mining companies with claims in Peru. Bond was furnished by a surety company.

The complaint charges McCune and others unnamed with having sold from $200,000 to $400,000 worth of stock in the Peruvian Exploration Company and the Maranon River Placers, Inc., on the strength of favorable reports by McCune, who said he had been to South America and investigated the properties.

Judgment.

BARNES LOSES DAMAGE SUIT.

TO APPEAL FROM DECISION OF SYRACUSE JURY.

After Forty-two Hours of Debate Eleven Members Persuade Recalcitrant Associate to Change His Opinion and Make the Finding Unanimous for Roosevelt.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) May 22.—Twelve men chosen as a jury to determine whether Theodore Roosevelt libeled William Barnes when he charged that he worked through a "corrupt alliance between crooked business and crooked politics," and that he was "corruptly allied with Charles F. Murphy of Tammany Hall," today returned a verdict in favor of the former President. In the belief of the jury everything Col. Roosevelt said about the former chairman of the Republican State Committee was true and therefore Mr. Barnes was not libeled.

Counsel for Mr. Barnes announced that an appeal would be taken.

The verdict was returned after forty ballots had been taken and the jury had considered for forty-two hours the evidence which was presented during five weeks of the trial. Nineteen hours were consumed before eleven of the jurymen, who since the second ballot had stood together, persuaded juror No. 11—Edward Burns, a Syracuse motorman and a Republican—to join with them in returning a verdict which Col. Roosevelt later declared to be "typically American."

TALK OVER ONE JUROR.

For eleven of those nineteen hours the jurors in favor of an unconditional verdict for the defendant talked to the one who, while himself favoring a similar verdict, insisted that the court costs and disbursements should be divided between the two principals.

The verdict was reached in the dormitory of the jail attached to the Onondaga County Courthouse and not in the jury-room. Juror Burns agreed to vote with his companions soon after the twelve arose this morning, following their second night in custody.

Mr. Barnes was not in court, and neither was his chief counsel, William M. Ivins, when the verdict was returned. The colonel was there, however, with his staff of counsel, some time before Justice Andrews ascended the bench and opened court.

OBJECTS TO VERDICT.

Immediately thereafter Henry Wolff, one of Mr. Barnes's attorneys, entered an objection to the verdict being received, as the jury had once been polled in court. That objection as well as a similar one entered after the verdict had been reported, was overruled.

When the jury had been called in from its room and its members had seated themselves, the foreman, Warren W. Sommers, almost in a whisper said that the verdict was for the defendant. In response to a request from Mr. Wolff the jury was then polled.

THE CHECKERBOARD OF THE WAR.

BY HARRY CARR.

IN EVERY war office in Europe they are setting a place at the blood-smeared table for Italy.

Italy's determination to enter the war involves problems so complex and entangled that the clearest way to consider this new phase of the war is by a series of questions and answers. We will cross-examine ourselves:

What will be the result of Italy's plunge into the war?

Military opinion differs. A well known naval expert, whose name I am not privileged to use, tells me that Italy will surely turn the tide against Germany. James F. J. Archibald, the war correspondent, expressed the opinion at Trinity Auditorium last Thursday night that Italy will have no great effect upon the war. It seems to me that the importance of Italy as a belligerent depends upon the extent of the Russian defeat. Also depends upon whether or not Italy is followed into the war by Roumania, Greece and Bulgaria.

How much strength has Italy as a military power?

Italy has a modern well-trained army of 2,000,000 men and a navy that ranks seventh or eighth, in point of strength, and among the first in point of efficiency. The Italian army made a poor showing in Tripoli, but is, nevertheless, regarded as efficient and powerful. The Italian officers are especially brilliant in the use of heavy artillery and cavalry. The enlisted men do not present the dapper, snappy appearance of some other European armies, but the Italian peasant is well adapted to the needs of modern war. He has the strength and endurance of a bull; is cheerful in adversity and is accustomed to hard work and frugal fare.

What are Italy's strategic advantages?

WHERE SHE STANDS.

She stands in the center of the ring. She can strike north at Austria; east to re-enforce the attack upon Constantinople; or go westward to re-enforce the line of battle in France. She furnishes a great base of operations for nearly every theater of war. In every field she is a dangerous possibility. Dangerous possibilities involve wasted men. Italy's greatest strategic strength is that the Austrian-German war offices will not know which of the possible campaigns she intends to choose and must prepare to meet her in all the different theaters of operation. Italy has this further advantage over the other nations that have gone to war with Germany; she is the only one which has had time to prepare and which was not in a position to be bewildered by the superior speed of the German mobilization. If ever a nation was ready for war it would seem to be Italy.

What are the points of inherent weakness in Italy's position?

Of all the nations now at war her acts are most influenced by "the man in the street." Italian politics are bitter and involved. From the "man in the street" has already risen the unreasoning cry to "get back the Trentino." Thus for reasons of sentiment it would seem that Italy will be compelled to open the war in her lost provinces. And the Trentino is not an easy place to take. It is a mountainous region, dominated by peaks, artillery positions and mountain forts. The Germans and Austrians have never placed the slightest faith in Italy's alliance and these mountain passes are heavily fortified. They can be defended by Austria without a great drain of strength, possibly by 500,000 men, if the Russian army does not come back to life too vigorously in the north.

What will happen if the Russian army is able to recover itself?

If it recovers its striking ability before being absolutely driven out of the Carpathians and resumes the offensive against Austria, it looks as though the Austrian-German cause would be lost; that Austria, at least, would have to conclude a separate peace or be annihilated. This will be especially true if Roumania sends her 500,000 trained war veterans against the Austrian right flank in Hungary.

RUSSIA'S CHANCES.

What are the probabilities of a Russian recovery?

It is very difficult to learn the real condition of the Russian army. The Russian advance upon the Carpathians is admitted to have been a failure. The Russians are in retreat and the Germans are trying to retake Przemysl and Lemberg. The Russians are suffering from a shortage of ammunition and supplies which only the capture of Constantinople can fully relieve. A sensational and daring cavalry raid by the Germans has no doubt made this shortage more acute. This raid has only been hinted at in the papers but I assume that it has taken place from the following facts. A week or so ago a German advance was reported in the direction of the Russian ports of Riga and Libau. The extreme rapidity of the movement indicated that it was a flying column made up largely of cavalry. From Riga, the Russians soon reported the Germans as rapidly retreating. This shows that it must have been a raid. Knowing that Riga and Libau are great storehouses for grain and supplies, it seems a fair assumption that the Germans made the raid to capture or destroy the Russian supplies. In spite of all these indications of disaster, we should remember that the Germans have not yet captured Warsaw or any vital Russian strategic center; also that it is almost impossible to really crush Russia. It is like sticking pins into an elephant.

What are the prospects of Russia being brought back to life by the passage of the Dardanelles?

Our American naval officers seem to think that the Dardanelles will finally be taken. The attitude of the British press and public would seem to indicate that the prospects are rather slim.

Are there any indications that Italy has entered the war because she feels that the allies are sure winners and she wants to climb into the band wagon?

On the contrary, the entrance of Italy seems to be a yell for help on the part of the allies. If Italy were declaring war to get into the wagon with the winner, she would have gone in a month ago when Austria was engaged in a desperate and then uncertain battle with the Russians. The best military authorities, like the conservative Army and Navy Journal, are of the opinion that neither side (as lined up before Italy came in) could win the war. It was a stale mate. The allies evidently realized that they needed great power to overwhelm Germany—especially after the defeat of the Russians.

ITALIAN DREAMS.

Then why did Italy take up arms?

Great concessions have, without doubt, been made by the allies to draw Italy into the war. Because of her poverty of resources, Italy has been forced into a foreign policy that has impressed an unsympathetic world as a fine imitation of the black hand. With plenty of factory power, cheap labor and raw materials, the hope of Italy is based largely upon her textile manufactories. But her textiles lack a market. She sends out cheap clothes to markets that are, in every case, controlled by some other government with textile factories to protect. It is necessary to Italian national life that she win important colonial possessions. Lacking the military power necessary, she is forced to take advantage of a position like this war to get what she must have. Incidentally national pride prompts her to get back her lost provinces in the Trentino. One significant fact in regard to Italy's entrance into the war is this: Of all the nations the one whose national ambitions are most hostile to Italy's future is Russia. The fact that Italy is now willing to fight the battles of her great rival for the Balkans would seem to signify that England is, from now on, to be recognized as the predominant figure in the Triple Entente and that, come what may, the Russian flag will never float over Constantinople.

What will Germany's natural defense be against Italy?

To bind her fixedly to one field of operations in the Trentino; turn over to Austria the job of fighting her; then attempt to make trouble in Italy. Germany, no doubt, relies upon the probability of the Italian people growing tired of the terrible grind of war and upon the probability of the political party in charge of the war being knifed by rival political parties.

What are the facts in regard to the shake-ups in the British War Office?

The British public, or a portion of it, accuses Kitchener of a failure to make good his promise to begin a great drive against the Germans in May; of having starved the British army in regard to the right kind of ammunition; of having maintained an unnecessary and stupid secrecy in regard to war news. Churchill is accused of blunders in the attack upon the Dardanelles; in wrongfully sending British marines to Antwerp, and in keeping the British battle fleet in a state of masterly inactivity for a year of the war.

KITCHENER'S POSITION.

What seems to be the merits of the charges?

Kitchener stands in the position of Gen. George B. McClellan at the outbreak of the Civil War: great organizer, worshiped by the men, but lacks the qualities of slam-bang warfare which the public and occasion seem to demand. He is a narrow-minded, unprogressive martinet and has never been much admired by the soldiers of other countries. His conduct of the Boer War did not show the highest qualities of war making. Foreign officers recognized Gen. French as the best British officer in the Boer War.

What became of Kitchener's great spring drive?

It began at Neuve Chapelle and was a comparative failure. In four days the British army consumed as much ammunition as during the entire Boer War of two and one-half years. The admitted losses were 572 officers and 12,239 men in three of the four days. During one part of the battle the losses continued for some time at the rate of a thousand men an hour. Nothing was accomplished except to make a little wriggle in the German line and to establish the fact that there aren't enough soldiers in the world to drive the Germans back to Berlin by frontal attacks upon trenches. Trench warfare is so new a feature of strategy that it will be necessary to invent some new method of attack. Kitchener is not inventive.

THE SHELLS.

Is it true that Kitchener made the wrong kind of ammunition?

There are, generally speaking, two kinds of artillery ammunition—shrapnel and bursting shells. If you can imagine a shotgun that hurled the cartridge and all through the air, the cartridge, in turn, discharging its contents at a given point on its flight—why, that is shrapnel. At the beginning of the war shrapnel was considered to be the best of all possible varieties of artillery ammunition. Some armies used no other kind of shell. Long before the war Gen. Von Bernhardi turned up his nose at shrapnel. After a few battles in this war the French artillerists announced that bursting shells were better adapted to trench fighting because the shells dropped into the ditches and sent fragments flying in every direction. Shrapnel, on the other hand, does its main damage by shooting a swarm of bullets in a fan-shaped spray directly to the front.

KITCHENER'S WORST MISTAKE.

What of the censorship?

In this respect Kitchener showed himself to be a man of less than big league caliber. A really big man would have recognized that in a country like England the press, public opinion, etc., are all an integral part of the nation's defense. Kitchener tried to handle the country like a lot of soldiers in a garrison. The great London dailies are willing to be censored, but state that the censorship is imbecilic in character. The news from the great battle of Neuve Chapelle, for instance, was withheld a month.

THE DARDANELLES.

What merits have the criticisms of Churchill?

All the navies of the world were staggered at the powers of defense shown by the forts of the Dardanelles. Churchill happened to be "the goat" for the disclosure. It was supposed by nearly all navy officers of all nations that the forts of the Dardanelles were obsolete. Behind the shell of the old Turkish forts it is now known that the Turks had the finest modern guns commanded by German officers. In this connection we Americans will remember how one of our smaller cruisers recently sailed up to Constantinople and made the terrible threat of bombarding the place unless the Sultan did thus and so. Knowing what he did about his own defenses, I imagine that the Sultan must have burst off a couple of suspender buttons laughing. Churchill has kept his battle fleets in masterly inactivity, but he has kept the seas clear. He whipped everything that floated. The use of the submarines has largely nullified the British naval preponderance, but this could not have been anticipated. Although the British battle fleet lies in idleness somewhere to the north of Scotland, yet it is doing its great part. It is quite as important for a watch dog to scare off burglars as to bite them.

WHEN THE END?

In the light of all these events and circumstances what are the prospects for an early ending of the war?

Unless so many Balkan states join the allies that Austria is crushed and Germany rushed off her feet by overwhelming numbers there is no prospect of any early settlement of the war. The conviction is growing among military men that the war will be decided by financial exhaustion. Germany seems to have definitely lost her power of offensive operation on a large scale; but, defending her trenches, she presents a terrific problem for an invader. The truth is that the defensive combination of trenches, machine guns and military railroads seems to have robbed battles of their decisive character.

PLAN GREAT MONUMENT FOR BELOVED PATRIOT.

Splendid Pile, Typifying a Nation's Regard for an Executive Who Served Well, is to be Reared in Native City of William McKinley — Architects Ask Leading Contractors to Submit Bids.

THE project to rear a magnificent national memorial to perpetuate the name and fame of William McKinley, our martyred President, became known here yesterday through a request by the architects of the proposed building that the largest contracting firms of this country make bids. This great structure inspired by the multitude of admirers of the late beloved President, will cost approximately $500,000 and will be 150 feet from the spot where William McKinley was born, on a city square donated by the people of Niles, O. A part of this square is the spot where stood the "little old white schoolhouse" where the late President first studied.

The National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association, sponsor of the project, has as officers such well-known men as Myron T. Herrick, former Ambassador to France; Joseph G. Butler, Jr., of Youngstown, O.; John G. Milburn of New York; W. A. Thomas of Niles, O., and J. G. Schmidlapp of Cincinnati, O. It is the intention of the association to commence work on the memorial June 6.

Deviating from the idea of other memorials, this work will be of unique design. It will have a monumental character and will contain an auditorium, a library, a relic room, a Grand Army room and other useful and educational adjuncts. It will be of granite. In front of the building will be a great statue of President McKinley. This building will be open to the public at all times, and in this manner will serve as a perpetual reminder of this truly great American.

COURT OF HONOR.

A special hall in the memorial will contain busts of the great men of President McKinley's administration. In this court of honor will be likenesses of Senator Hanna and Secretary John Hay, among others.

The memorial is to be 232½ feet long, 136 feet in depth and 36 feet high. It will be thirty-six feet longer than the proposed Lincoln Memorial in Washington.

When the association, projecting this memorial, was first inaugurated by Joseph G. Butler, Jr., it was decided to incorporate under an act of Congress. This was done March 4, 1911. At first it was thought $100,000 would cover all expenses. As the idea grew and took definite form, the first estimate seemed inadequate, and it was found necessary to increase the amount proposed to $500,000.

So well did the people of America respond to the call that the architects, McKim, Mead and White of New York, were enabled to commence work on the plans. The blue prints are now completed and contractors have been requested to bid for the work.

When the city of Niles learned of the proposed memorial it responded immediately by offering the entire city square for a site.

The responses that have reached the association from all sections of the United States, and the royal good will that came with the financial aid, proved immediately the people of this country recognized at once the debt they owe to the memory of this great American statesman. From the stack of correspondence that still pours into the headquarters of the association at Youngstown, O., it would seem the building of this memorial has been delayed too long.

HIS LIFE.

William McKinley was born in Niles, O., January 29, 1843. He was the seventh in a family of nine children. In 1852 the McKinley family removed to Poland, Mahoning county, Ohio, where William was placed in school. When 17 years old, he entered Allegheny College, but, studying beyond his strength was forced to give up his studies a short time later. He then commenced teaching school.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, young McKinley enlisted as a private in the Twenty-third Ohio Infantry. For distinguished service he was promoted on the field of battle to the rank of first lieutenant. Rising rapidly, he finally was brevetted major, serving on the staff of Gen. Rutherford B. Hayes. He was mustered out with his regiment July 26, 1865.

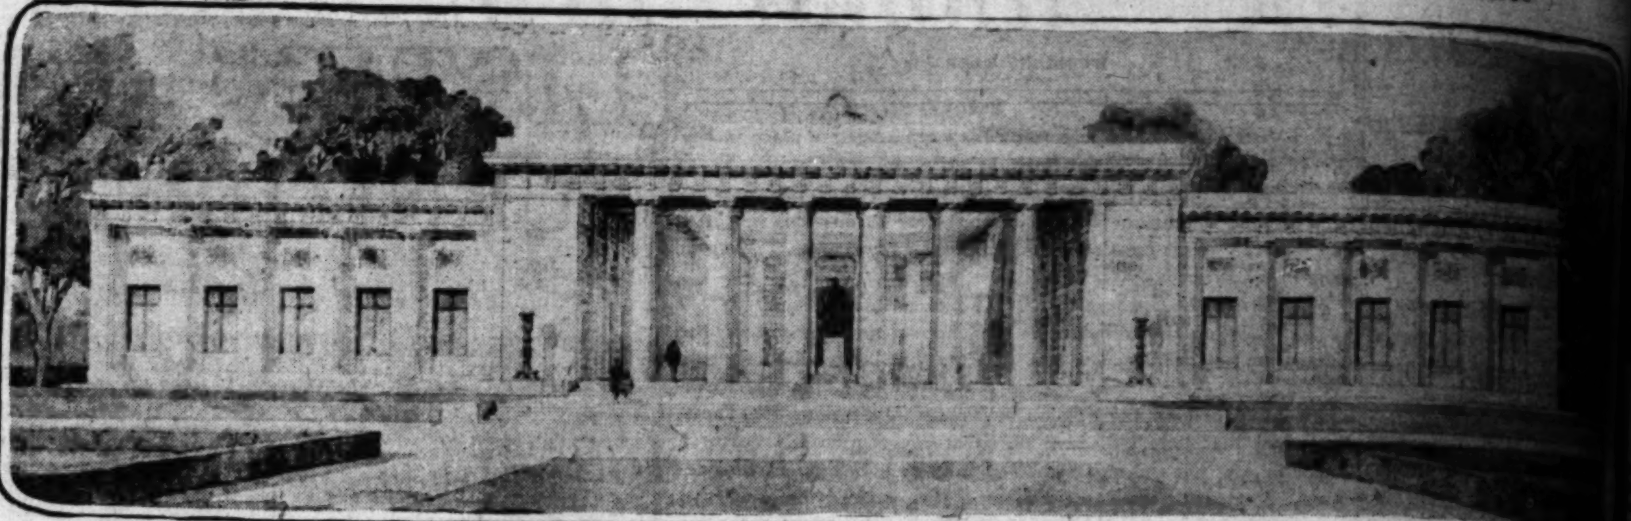
Young McKinley had entered the war a pale, sickly lad. He came out of the maelstrom a man of superb figure and health.

The inborn ability that marked him as a man deserving of promotion in the army served him well in civil life. Believing firmly in the rights of the American manufacturer regarding protection, young McKinley rose rapidly in public life. In 1876 he was elected by an overwhelming majority to the House of Representatives. He so distinguished himself in that body that the people of his home State, Ohio, took notice of his work. In November, 1891, he was elected Governor of Ohio by a plurality of more than 21,000 votes.

William McKinley was inaugurated President of the United States March 4, 1897. Until the day of his death he served the people of his country with an ability that has been equalled by few.

An anarchist, Leon Czolgosz, fired two shots at President McKinley, while the latter was holding a reception at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, N. Y., September 6, 1901. After the world had been assured the patient was recovering and doing well, he collapsed and died September 14. The funeral services were conducted five days later in Canton, O., the occasion being remarkable for the public manifestations of mourning, not only in the United States but throughout the world.

Appropriate Proposed National McKinley Birthplace Memorial.



To stand within a stone's throw of where the martyred President first saw the light.

The city of Niles, O., has offered a whole square of land in its center as a site for this magnificent building. A part of the lot is where the beloved McKinley studied in the "Little Ol[illegible] Schoolhouse."

THE MOTHERS' CONGRESS.

Delegate of the Woman's Peace Society Delivers an Address—Amazed by the Conditions in Europe.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—"There must be an international force to repress national wrongs."

This was the dictum of Mrs. May Wright Sewall, chairman of the Organizing Committee of the Woman's Peace Party, at the National Congress of Mothers' and Parent-Teachers' Association in convention here today.

"Isn't it frightful?" she demanded, "that the internationalism of the age is most marvelously expressed on the battlefield?"

Mrs. Sewell spoke on the subject of, "The Training That Will Secure to Our Children the Blessings Pronounced on the Peacemaker."

Mt. Lassen in Eruption.

on-sweeping tides of Lassen's overflow were rushing upon them, and they commenced a swift exodus.

Word was received that a spray of volcanic ash had fallen at Imlay, Nev., 200 miles from the peak, and that the huge burst of smoke was seen at Sacramento from the cupola of the State Capitol, 175 miles away. Automobile parties left from cities 100 miles and more away to witness the spectacle.

Redding was pitched into a frenzy of excitement. Fire bells tolled, people rushed from homes and buildings, streets were deserted in the business section, roofs were crowded, and business was suspended until the activity of the peak subsided at 6 p.m.

Definite details of the destruction wrought were lacking, only meager news coming over telephone wires to Redding, which is forty-seven miles from the mountain. Reports came over the telephone from Montgomery Creek of the flight of families from Hat Creek Valley and the enormous size of the mud flow.

Dozens of homes and the best farming and stock land of the valley lay directly in the channel of flow. By 6 o'clock the flood of mud and lava had reached and submerged the ranch of Wilbur Wilcox. Its people had escaped, driving their livestock before them.

FOUR STREAMS SEEN.

Four distinct streams which poured over the crest of the peak united and converted Lassen's side, covered with a fresh blanket of snow this morning, into a blackened, desolate waste. The streams poured on into Hat Creek Valley, still choked and littered with the refuse of destruction wrought by the earlier eruptions.

Charles Opdyke and Fred Larkin, who set out early today to investigate in the danger zone, were driven back by the gas-poisoned atmosphere.

With news that expert opinion had been passed upon the volcanic potentialities of the peak and the danger declared small, people in the mountain's vicinity had ventured back to their homes and visitors had approached the mountain to view the destruction done by the crater's overflow. They were unconcerned until the outbreak late today. When the new and more terrific disturbance occurred they rushed out in haste and there was no one tonight, so far as fas known, with sufficient hardihood to venture within the danger zone.

All horses, wagons and automobiles in Montgomery Creek, Carbon and Cassel were pressed into service for relief of the refugees. All thought of property destruction was forgotten in the desire to save human life.

Lassen's crater is reported to have been entirely levelled. Formerly it had three distinct undulations, but these have been worn away and the crevasses and dips filled by the continuous cataract of erupted substance.

A report from the power station at Cow Creek said that one side of the volcano had been blown off and toppled into the lake near the base of the crater, the water displaced adding to the flood.

So far the volcanic flow has been confined to Hat Creek Valley and adjacent valleys are considered immune from danger unless the subterranean forces hurl rocks and lava over the natural barriers.

Rocks and boulders were flung hundreds of feet into the air by the crater's explosion, according to a report from Montgomery Creek. They wrecked the forest service bureau station at Twin Bridges. Rumbling and roaring preceded the outburst. Hot pumice was among the substances ejected. Although no adequate estimate could be put upon the damage of Lassen's latest eruption, it was regarded as certain that it would run into thousands of dollars.

Following an electric storm which raged around the summit of Lassen last night, there came a report early today that the rim of the crater had fallen in. Weather conditions and the danger of new eruptions prevented thorough investigation, although two forest rangers ventured far up the mountain's side.

GREAT DAMAGE DONE.

Farmers, driven from their homes in panic yesterday by the flood of mud that laid a black blanket from one to three feet deep over an area fifteen miles long and from one-half to two miles wide, returned today to look over the desolated landscape. They found their crops destroyed, stock killed and large damage done to farm equipment. Every bridge for thirty miles down Hat Creek Valley was reported gone.

Word from Forest Supervisor W. J. Rushing that the tide of mud was rich soil and would act as an excellent fertilizer cheered the farmers.

Rushing accounted for the flow of mud on the theory that hot lava pouring from the crater had melted the snows that flank the mountain's slopes and had set in motion a landslide of fluid earth.

RANGERS' REPORT.

Great heat exists in the crater, according to the report made to Rushing by two rangers. They ascended the side of the volcano, but were compelled to turn back by the water and mud flowing down the western slope of the peak.

They reported that as they ascended the heat became greater. Ordinarily the sides have been covered with snow down to the timber line. Nearly all the snow was reported to have disappeared.

Lost Creek and Rising River, tributaries of Hat Creek, overflowed their banks.

The flooding of these three streams is said to have been the first instance in many years of their failure to carry off all water without overflowing.

Ranchers driven from the valley are waiting determination of the nature of the mud stratum.

MAY BECOME A DANGER.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

VALLEJO, May 22.—Steam formed from the immense quantities of water deposited in the crater in Lassen Peak during the recent cloudburst over that region, was given today by Prof. T. J. J. See of the Mare Island Observatory, an authority on seismic disturbances, as the probable cause of the eruption of mud.

"The present eruption increases the chance for Lassen to become dangerous," he said. "Roughly, I should say the chance is one in ten that it would become dangerous."

Prof. See said that scientific data confirmed the belief that Lassen is too far from the sea to permit a leakage from that source which could explain the accumulation of a volume of steam to cause a menacing eruption.

SEEN AT SACRAMENTO.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, May 22. — The eruption of Lassen Peak at 5 o'clock this afternoon, which threw a column of smoke four miles into the air, was seen by a number of persons, who happened to be in the dome of the State Capitol at the time. A number of automobile parties left here tonight in the hope of seeing another big eruption from points of vantage farther north.

VISIBLE AT WESTWOOD.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

RENO (Nev.) May 22.—Three eruptions of Lassen Peak since 5 o'clock this afternoon were witnessed by residents of Westwood, Cal., twenty-five miles distant from the crater. The flames could be observed, although the entire district is covered with a heavy haze. Ashes fell at Amedee, Cal. At Imlay, Nev., 200 miles directly east from Lassen Peak, ashes have been falling throughout the evening. Ashes also are falling at Gerlach, on the Western Pacific Railroad.

CHAUTAUQUA SEASON.

Ontario to Have Six Days of it with Three Sessions Daily at Chaffney High School.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ONTARIO, May 22.—All Ontario and surrounding towns are awaiting with pleasant expectation the opening of the Chautauqua, which will commence next Tuesday and continue for six days.

The Chautauqua is brought to Ontario this year by the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, and this city is one of very few in the southern part of the State which will have it.

The Chautauqua will be held on the Chaffney High School campus, the tent, which will seat 2000, now being put up.

There will be morning, afternoon and evening sessions each day. Among the leading attractions will be Ciricillo's Italian Band, Il Trovatore Grand Opera Company, Swiss Alpine Yodlers, Nels Darling, lecturer; the Floyds of Boston, the Schumann String Quintette, Father Patrick J. MacCorry and many others. Nearly 500 season tickets have already been sold by the chamber.

HANFORD'S BIRTHDAY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

HANFORD, May 22.—All Kings county united tonight in one grand evening of revelry, celebrating the county's twenty-second anniversary and combining with the celebration ratification of the success of the $672,500 county highway bond election, held May 6, which carried by an overwhelming majority. The city was ablaze with illumination and 3000 masked dancers attended the big open-air ball, held on the asphalt pavement in one of the business blocks. Ten thousand persons from out of town were added to the city's population. The grand march was led by the city and county officials.

Reno.

HORIZON IS OBSCURED, SAYS NEVADA REPORT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

RENO, May 22.—The entire horizon was obscured by the first eruption from Lassen Peak late this afternoon, according to railroad passengers arriving tonight. At Amedee, Cal., the first eruption was noticed at 4:20 o'clock, and twenty minutes later a surveyor measured the dimensions of the ink-colored cloud. The peak of the smoke was estimated at seven miles above the earth and spread in a mushroom shape. The base was five miles in width. The entire mass rapidly drifted to the east.

Reports from Eastern Nevada tonight indicate that the ashes have fallen at Winnemucca and Golconda, about 300 miles from Lassen Peak.

At 8 o'clock tonight flames were visible at Westwood, Cal., about twenty-five miles from the peak.

REPORTS FINE PROGRESS IN COMPANY'S AFFAIRS

Los Angeles Investment Management Gives Out Statement of Gratifying Results in Settlement with Debtor Stockholders — Firm Optimism for Future Expressed — Crisis Considered Past by Close Observers.

VERY gratifying results have been obtained by the directorate of the Los Angeles Investment Company, in following out a compromise settlement of the debtor stockholder problem—the most difficult with which the board has had to deal. So satisfactory has been the progress that firm optimism as to the company's future is expressed.

In fact, some of the level-headed stockholders who have analyzed the affairs of the company very closely, have reached the conclusion that, with the ending of litigation and a reasonable settlement with debtor stockholders, the actual net value of the properties which the company owns should make the stock worth from $2 to $2.50 a share. Furthermore, it is firmly felt the crisis in the company is past.

The 11th inst. the directors decided on a definite plan for settlement with more than 4000 stockholders owing various sums on stock subscriptions. Solvent debtors are to pay their notes; those wishing to pay, but unable at the present time, are to be granted further time on the execution of new notes, with the same stock as collateral; insolvent, or financially irresponsible parties are to be released on surrender and forfeiture of stock and their notes are to be cancelled. This action followed a previous request for a duly attested statement from each delinquent subscriber, giving reasons for his failure to pay, and was predicated on several such statements received.

COMPANY STATEMENT.

In a statement given out yesterday by the company management progress in following out this idea is reported. It is declared several hundred affidavits have been filed and are in process of examination. Moreover, settlement has been reached in a considerable number of cases, whereby new installment notes were taken in settlement of the old indebtedness. Many cases are presented weekly to the board of directors for their action.

More than 4600 letters were mailed out to debtor stockholders. Of these 748 have been returned as unclaimed.

EVANGELIST SAYS WORLD WILL READ, NOT THE BIBLE, BUT CHRISTIANS.

Last evening was "rally night" at the Brown and Curry Tabernacle in Hollywood and a large crowd was present. "Jesus is a Friend of Mine" was a special song offering by C. P. Curry. At 6 o'clock this evening James Garth, the pianist, will talk to the young people's societies at the Christian Church.

Rev. J. E. Brown spoke on an extract from the "Sermon on the Mount." He said in part:

It is a sad fact the world does not read the Bible; but one thing certain, the world does read the Christian.

They cannot understand the mystery of the new birth, but the redeemed can understand the fruits of it. Ye are the light of the world if the Word becomes part of your flesh. The privilege is yours to lead men into the light of the Word. If you live the Christian life, men and women around you will get hungry for Christ.

The hardest place in the world to shine is right down there in your own home. If there is any dog in you, of there is any devil in you, it will come out in your home. Some of you can go to bed singing, but can you get up singing? I'll give some of you a quarter if you will try it, and do it.

Sam P. Jones said: "We talk about the Lord preserving us; the trouble is, we don't know the difference between a preserve and a pickle. For every preserve you find me in some churches, I will find you a half-dozen pickles.

"If you tell the sinner you love him and you don't, he will know you are lying. The Bible has practically nothing to say about the mind, but it does have lots to say about the heart. God speed the day when we will get our religion down into our hearts.

"To love a sinner is to win him to God. When everything else fails, love will win."

WRITES DEFENSE FOR MEXICANS.

FORMER MADERO OFFICER SAYS THEY ARE MALIGNED.

Declares Southern Republic's Revolution has not Approached in Cruelty or Barbarism Reported German Deeds in Belgium or Alleged Actions of Russians.

LOS ANGELES, May 22.—[To the Editor of The Times:] It would be difficult, we surmise, to find in Los Angeles one Mexican who has not been affected after reading an editorial of The Times entitled "Something Must be Done with Mexico," printed the 13th inst., inasmuch as in the very moment in which the whole world was stricken with horror by the sinking of the Lusitania, the result of that terrible tragedy having been the loss of more than 1000 lives of men, women and children noncombatants, the editorial writer of this daily paper describes Mexico, with the utmost cruel criticism, as the country "presenting more wantonness, desolation and indiscriminate ferocity" than the European war can furnish, and asserts that Mexicans have fallen backward into barbarism.

Something particularly rotten there undoubtedly must be at the bottom of such severe criticism, because had the editorial writer taken the slightest pains to learn that in the very same issue in which appears his bitter comments was to be published, in a prominent place and under this suggestive head, "Saturnalia of Massacre," the most overwhelming arraignment ever made of the German military sweep across Belgium, it is very likely he would have postponed his hard remarks until a better opportunity or perhaps he would not even have published them at all.

Of course, it would be childish enough to hold that the Mexican revolution has been free of some of those excesses naturally inherent in this kind of social commotions, as is attested by history; but if on the map of civilized nations it is desired to know, dispassionately and with a true spirit of justice, where is displayed now the greater "ferocity" and greater contempt of the human life, it will certainly not be Mexican territory—the place upon the planet, where either the censor or sociologist would have to use his most energetic traits in order to draw the biggest red cross.

I don't speak theoretically. Let me refer to only two actual cases. Firstly, I appeal to the high testimony of one very notable individual of wisdom and character.

The British government once appointed as its Ambassador in Washington Mr. James Bryce, chairman of a special government committee to investigate and report on "outrages alleged to have been committed by German troops during the present war."

Now, the necessary investigations were made, carefully enough, and there was rendered the report, which, as I have said, may be read in full in the same issue of The Times in which appeared the criticism aforesaid. It has been evidenced in the report, summing up and in the last analysis, that "individual acts of brutality— ill treatment of civilians, rape, plunder and the like—were very widely committed. These are more numerous and more shocking than would be expected in warfare between civilized powers, but they differ rather in extent than in kind from what happened in previous though not recent wars."

In the present—and this is the gravest charge against the German army—"evidence shows that the killing of noncombatants was carried out to an extent for which no previous war between nations claiming to be civilized furnishes any precedent."

The soldiers of the revolution's army in Mexico have never, as far as we know, received orders from their higher officers "to organize and carry out a general and deliberate plan of terrorization and of cruel action against civilians" through regions crossed by the army; any unrestrained misdemeanor of the troops is committed without the authorization of the officers; neither the former nor the latter ever have deemed it a "military necessity" to kill defenseless noncombatants or shoot prisoners at the rate of 500 to 1000, as the Germans did at Hermetou, according to Mr. Bryce's report.

Although it may happen that Mexico has "fallen backward into barbarism," after our gratuitous critic's opinion, the Mexican revolutionary leaders have never adopted a "part of the programme" to reach their liberty ideals, the policy of setting on fire whole towns and villages, even unsystematically, by hand grenades and benzine, neither have they "burned alive the pecheurs in their houses, their efforts to escape being prevented by rifle fire."

Make a comparison between a Mexican leader's attitude—that of Gen. Francisco Villa, who put in the hands of the foreign Consuls in Irafinato a communication addressed to Gen. Alvaro Obregon, intrenched at the time within the walls of Celaya City, and requesting him in the name of human sentiment to permit children, women and aged men to leave the town before it was bombarded—compare this with the attitude of German military chiefs in invading Belgium, in the manner described by Mr. Bryce, and in sinking, without warning, the Falaba and Lusitania, in which disasters perished so many men, women and children.

The second case refers to the Russian army's behavior under the command of Gen. Sievers during the campaign in East Prussia. On the 11th of last April, the American press published with long heads and lavishness of detail and photographs, a report rendered to the War Ministry in Berlin, containing all the atrocities committed by that army and narrated by the neutral correspondent, Mr. Edward Lyall Fox, who had accompanied Gen. von Hindenburg in the last great battles in that region.

Comparing the conduct of Gen. Sievers and that of the officers of his staff, during their sojourn in a place named Scharen, near Pilkallen, with the behavior observed by our revolutionary officers, as described in the biased affidavits which have come from Mexico, and if we have fallen back into barbarism, as has been said, I don't conceive then into what state some European nations have fallen backward in their turn.

If it is true that our army officers have happened to commit crimes against woman's honor, that has happened in sporadic and individual cases and in some of the higher officers have punished the lawbreakers with the immediate penalty of death; but what may be affirmed is that no officer has ever transformed any Hotel Skusrun into an "official harem," as was done by the Russian officers. The mentioned report says in part: "The staff officers of Gen. Sievers almost daily dragged women to their quarters and imprisoned them to profane them; troops were sent out to capture the fairest and youngest women and bring them to the Hotel Skusrun. At the point of the bayonet they tore mothers and daughters from their homes and carried them to the gray stone dungeon, and if they screamed, they were choked or beaten." And further on: "Thousands of innocent women have been outraged by Russian officers and soldiers."

I don't believe there exists in Mexico any woman who has passed a Christmas Eve as did Martha Packulat in Pilkallen last December in the hands of Cossacks; neither have I heard that Mexican soldiers ever killed a woman because she refused to give them a glass of wine.

Taking, therefore, in consideration such facts as have been quoted, coming from such valuable and reliable sources, I dare say, synthetizing the whole question, that we, the Spaniard-Aztec people, have proved mere cherubims beside the Teutons and Slav races of nowadays.

San Francisco Police Asked to Arrest Sixteen-year-old Ruth Curry of Los Angeles.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 22.—Acting on telegraphic instructions from Chief of Police Sebastian of Los Angeles, detectives of the local detective bureau met the steamer Harvard today to arrest Ruth Curry, 16 years old, and a man with whom she is reported to have eloped from Los Angeles. The detective found that the girl who had traveled under the alias of Marie Wray, had left the boat as soon as it docked, and, accompanied by her companion, whose name is not known, had departed for Palo Alto. The police of the latter city had not located the couple at a late hour tonight.

CAN SEE THROUGH A WALL WITH MARCONI INVENTION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 22.—Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraph, departed today for Italy on the American steamer St. Paul, in response to a summons from the Italian government. Before boarding the ship he made it known that the time is almost here when, if he chooses to give to science the secret of a new apparatus he has invented, it will be possible for persons on one side of a solid partition to observe what is taking place in the adjoining room.

The possibilities for evil involved in the amazing invention have made its discoverer reluctant to make it known to the world until he is fully acquainted with all its uncanny qualities and he admitted that it might be some time before he would feel justified in giving a demonstration to his fellow-scientists.

The apparatus in its present state resembles in outward appearance a sort of camera. When placed against a wall or floor it renders transparent the material against which it rests, permitting its user to observe objects or persons on the other side.

"I have not quite perfected it," he said. "Persons can be seen in the next room if they are close enough to the wall, but at any distance they become blurred."

The inventor also discussed tests made in his presence at the wireless plant in Sayville, in which the effort was made to get in touch with Germany by wireless telephone, a possibility so imminent that the experimenters are convinced that only the unfavorable weather conditions that night prevented the experiment from being successful.

A third invention in which Marconi expressed his confidence was that of the telephone over which the two speakers can see each other.

"That is undoubtedly coming," he said. "I can safely assure you of that, though personally I am not working on it."

LOS ANGELES AVIATOR IS WOUNDED IN MEXICO.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EL PASO (Tex.) May 22.—Fighting in Central Mexico gradually increased in volume last week until early yesterday morning the Villa and Obregon armies were drawn into a general engagement. This was reported by persons arriving here directly from the Villa front.

Farnum F. Fish, an American aviator employed by the Villa army, has arrived here, having been wounded in the fighting last week. One bullet passed through his leg and body and several other balls struck an aeroplane which he managed to retain in the air. Fish is from Los Angeles, Cal.

Fish has reported that his companion, Mickey McGuire, also employed as an aviator by Villa, was killed last Tuesday while returning from a scouting expedition. He fell 200 feet and lived two days after. One other American aviator previously was killed in an accident at the Villa front. All were employed originally through J. S. Berger, an aviation promoter of Chicago.

Berger today began injunction proceedings against the Villa government in an endeavor to hold up shipments of ammunition at this port. Berger claimed a large sum was due here for services rendered.

Those arriving from the front tonight reported that the battle line extends east and west from a point ten miles south of Leon in virtually the same positions occupied by the two armies for the last month.

AN AUSTRIAN BARRACKS DESTROYED BY EXPLOSION.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

VERONA (Italy) May 22.—The Austrian barracks at Rovereto, a town in the Tyrol with about 12,000 Italian inhabitants, was blown up today.

The police immediately placed under arrest many Italian citizens, although there was no evidence to show that the Italians were in any way responsible for the explosion.

PRAYING FOR HUMILITY, GETS BLOWS IN FACE.

BERT C. SMITH, a publicity agent for the Northern Baptist Convention, prayed for divine guidance in settling an argument with J. A. Vivarttas, a press association man, in Berean Hall of the Temple Baptist Church yesterday afternoon, and while he was praying Mr. Vivarttas struck him twice. Mr. Smith went to the Receiving Hospital, where four stitches were taken in a wound over his left eye. Mr. Vivarttas was taken to the Central Police Station, where he was released after examination, Mr. Smith saying he would procure a complaint for assault Monday morning. The next moment the belligerents shook hands and agreed to "forget it."

The story told by Mr. Smith and corroborated by witnesses is that Mr. Vivarttas called on him in his office in Berean Hall and asked for reports of the convention sessions. There arose a discussion over the relative news value of reports and this diverged into personalities. "If I were not a Christian and trying to live as a Christian should, I would be tempted to throw you out of that window," said Mr. Smith.

"It would take a lot more like you to do that," replied Vivarttas.

At about that point in the dialogue Mr. Smith either brushed Mr. Vivarttas aside, or slapped him with the back of his hand—accounts differ—and then Mr. Smith dropped to his knees and began to frame an audible prayer.

Right at that point, Mr. Smith said, something hit him.

Mr. Vivarttas insisted that Mr. Smith struck first and denied that Mr. Smith was kneeling when struck. Later, however, he admitted that Mr. Smith "might have been kneeling" when the blows were struck.

Only two or three persons witnessed the affair, but there was some excitement when the men left the building in the police automobile as the crowd was coming from the church convention hall.

EXTOL MEMORY OF HERO-PADRE

Hundreds See His Garme Presented to Museum.

Recovered Relics Convey with Much Ceremony.

Recall Original of Belov Character of Fiction.

Honoring the memory of one of the hero-padres of California, Rev. cisco de Jesus Sanchez, the "Father Salvierderra" of the romance, "Ramona," about 150 sons gathered at Exposition yesterday to participate in the entation of some of the garmen that venerable man to the Museum History, Science and Art.

Preceding the programme of ing, a procession made up of the lice band, Indians, Franciscan ers in their habits, Native Sons Daughters of the Golden Knights of Columbus, members several other organizations and tinguished citizens, passed across sunken gardens of the park and ceeded to the portico of the Museum Building. Here the Stars and Stripes the Bear Flag of California and the banners of Spain and Mexico grouped, while at the head of long steps were gathered the taries of the occasion.

Owing to the illness of William Bowen, president of the board governors of the museum, Walter McEntire, memoeis of the Com tee of Arrangements, presided was introduced by Frank S. Dagg director of the museum and host the day. Rev. Paul Dillon deliv a brief invocation followed by thrilling "Gloria" of Manso, rend by the choir of St. Agnes Church.

Rev. Theophilus Richardt, O.F.M. head of the Franciscan Order Southern California, declared that though the Franciscans have car the gospel to every known part the world, nowhere have they ceived the tribute and honors stowed on them in California.

HIS WORKS.

In presenting the relics of Father Sanchez, William A. Alderson, the donor, declared that much of the casion had to do with Helen Hunt Jackson, whom he characterized the most brilliant, impetuous thoroughly individual woman in the history of American literature. "Her 'Ramona' was as powerful and effective in benefiting the poor mission Indian as was 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' in freeing the negro," he declared. He gave some of the characteristics of Father Sanchez or "Father Salvierderra."

The fact that Mrs. Jackson was accompanied to this country by the Henry Sandham, distinguished English artist, to secure accurate sketches for "Ramona" led to the possibility of finding and presenting the relics. The artist, in writing of his efforts in this direction and of Father Sanchez, says: "In my studio I have the father's complete costume, given me at the time I was making the 'Ramona' sketches, including the cassock, cowl, sandals and hempen girdle with its symbolical five knots. The sandals are well worn and the cowl bleached and faded by the sun—marks of the endless toil and duty so faithfully described by Mrs. Jackson."

At this point, Mr. Alderson stated that the daughter of the artist, Miss Gwendoline Sandham, had not only given these relics, but promised her father's original sketch of "Father Salvierderra" as soon as shipment without danger from the perils of war would permit. The reason not all of the articles described were presented, according to Miss Sandham, was the loss by fire of one of the sandals and the girdle. Mr. Alderson then showed that the as shipped from abroad was and turned it over to Rt. Rev. Bishop Conaty so that in future there be no question as to authenticity the relics. At the same time he several pictures and the first off the press for exhibits. The as a loan of Mrs. Coronel.

Bishop Conaty accepted the formally and spoke hopefully of the possible restoration of the sions. He then presented the to Director Daggett.

At a conference held yesterday morning between Commissioner Allin and the property owners along the west ridge of the Arroyo, where the proposed road will be built, Mr. Allin said that he thought he would be able to include an appropriation of $5000 in the road improvement budget for the next fiscal year for the rough grading of the proposed ridge highway. This would go a long way toward finishing the road and would be available for use this summer.

Mr. Burns, who is the largest property owner on the proposed "skyline drive," said yesterday that he would tender the right of way for a road from the Colorado-street county boulevard west of the Arroyo to his property if the drive is carried through. EMPIRE DAY PICNIC.

Overseas Club at Redondo Beach. Stranger Plunges into the Sea to Save Boy.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDONDO BEACH, May 22.—Members of the Overseas Club, 250 strong, invaded this beach today, and, in a quiet way at their annual picnic, celebrated Empire Day of the British.

Though there was no set programme, several impromptu addresses were delivered. W. J. Willacy, president of the organization, was one of the speakers of the day and a leader in the festivities, which took on the form of bathing, beach games and dancing.

SAVED BY STRANGER.

Considerable excitement followed a report today at noon that a boy, 14 years old, was caught in a tiderip while bathing near Second street, Hermosa Beach, near the Hermosa-Redondo line. A call was sent to the local bath-house, and Percy Furlong, lifeguard, who recently returned from the University of California to take up his duties here, and Ray Henderson hurried to the scene.

Upon arriving there the two lifeguards found that a man, whose name was not learned, had plunged into the water with his clothes on and rescued the boy. The man was barely able to make the shore, according to the information given the guards.

LIFE-SIZE SIGN BOARDS.

In order to take no chances of campers not knowing the law, Water Superintendent Cooke has ordered Canyon Guard Harkness to paint signs three feet square calling attention of campers to the fact that fires are allowed only in certain places designated. These mammoth signs will be placed at strategic points in Monrovia-canyon Park, where thousands enjoy outings every month. Several narrow escapes from serious fires during the past few weeks have made the officers determined to take no risks.

Elliot demanded that the trustees set aside the contract on the grounds of collusion and unfair competition, and that they readvertise and let the contract over again.

According to Elliot, it was shown by estimates made after the contract was let and the specifications recorded that the price at which it was let was at least 30 per cent. higher than such specifications might reasonably exact. The board considered the petition in executive session and the matter will be submitted to the County Counsel for legal advice.

Architect E. L. Hopkins and the successful bidder, Larkin, were present at the meeting. The architect claims the plans were taken from his office by one of the bidders and were not returned in time to be submitted generally. Larkin did not deny the statements made by Elliot officially, but denied privately any knowledge on the part of his company of a request for an accommodation bid.

Elliot stated positively the trustees had no knowledge of the alleged fraud and that the fact the ywere holding up action pending advice from the County Counsel justified this belief.

ANGELENO BOOSTERS CAPTURE SAN DIEGO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, May 22.—Los Angeles boosters were seen and heard today all over the exposition and such an enthusiastic crowd has not visited the fair in a long time. The Angelenos came in their special train which arrived a little after noon today. They came on the regular trains and hundreds came in automobiles. More than a thousand boosters, including many women, were in the various parties that came from the northern city.

The special train which brought the Chamber of Commerce party, headed by Senator Robert N. Bulla, president, and Frank Wiggins, secretary, was met by President Davidson and other exposition officials and San Diego Chamber of Commerce officers. The famous Kilties and a troupe of young women, the Venetian Troubadours, who accompanied the Los Angeles party, entertained throughout the day here, as well as on the train coming down.

A luncheon was served the Los Angeles people by the Southern California Counties Commission in the patio of the Southern California Counties Building. Later a reception was held in the Blue Room of the building and in the evening the visitors were guests at a ball in the California Building.

The visiting Angelenos, combined with the activities of the local Ad Club, served to make the day one of the gayest possible. A great parade this morning opened the Ad Club festivities in which troopers of the First Cavalry, the Marine Corps and soldiers of the Coast Artillery marched.

Floats entered by the concessionaries of the fair and merchants, formed the second part of the parade. A hearse bearing the remains of "Dull Care" in a casket was a feature of the parade. After lying in state the last remains of Care were buried later in the afternoon by the Ad Club.

This afternoon there was a Shakespearean festival on the lawn and a children's dancing party on the Isthmus. This evening the Ad Club, the Angelenos and thousands of other visitors held gay carnival on the Isthmus. At 10:30 o'clock a Human Ad parade with hundreds of grotesque and comical entries wended its way down the Isthmus and from then on the gaiety increased. Thousands were in Yama Yama costume and others of every description.

At midnight the Ad Club held the coronation ceremonies proclaiming Joy as king.

SANTA ANA BRIEFS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA ANA, May 22.—From an injury received through the accidental discharge of his revolver on April 8, Charles E. Grouard died this morning. Mr. Grouard was a pioneer brickyard owner and contractor of Santa Ana and for two terms was a member of the City Council. He was injured when his revolver, falling from beneath his pillow to the floor, was discharged, shattering a bone of one leg. While the wound healed, other complications brought about death. The funeral will be held at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon.

PAYS A FINE.

On pleading guilty to taking more than twenty-five pounds of cockles from Anaheim Bay near Sunset Beach, M. Smith of Long Beach today paid a fine of $20. Deputy Sheriff Meyer of Sunset Beach stated that residents of his section are angered over inroads being made upon the cockle beds by men who ship the cockles to Los Angeles. When Smith was brought here he pleaded extreme poverty. He said he was broke and had a family to support. On the first search of him at the jail the officers found no money. Later they discovered $35.35 hidden in his shoes.

IMPERIAL, May 22.—In the ruins of a single-room house on a farm northeast of here were found the charred bodies of Stokes Patterson and his wife, negroes, early this morning. No one has been found that saw the house burn, and the origin of the fire is a mystery. The woman was found lying across the springs of the bed, the side irons of which had curved under her weight in the heat. The man was found beside the bed. It is believed by some that foul play has been committed, although no reasonable clew or motive has been advanced. The police believe the fire started in an incubator set inside the room.

ARREST OWNER FOR THEFT OF HIS OWN CAR; LAUGH AT EXPLANATIONS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

RIVERSIDE, May 22.—C. H. Daum of this city is ruminating upon the strange vicissitudes of life since his arrest in Pasadena for the theft of an automobile which was his very own. Especially humiliating was it to have the desk sergeant icily inform him that the story told by the automobile owner was the same that had been repeated in the officer's hearing for the past ten years.

It was only after spending a neat sum in long-distance tolls that Daum was able to convince the Pasadena officers that he had recovered the car he was driving after its theft in Los Angeles several days previously. The vigilant eye of a patrolman had espied the car and in the absence of information of its recovery by Daum the latter was held responsible for its theft.

NEWS NOTES.

A taxicab doing "jitney" service was overturned with its owner and driver, J. H. Wilson, a little after noon today, at Ninth and Mulberry streets. The top of the car was badly smashed, but Wilson escaped with slight bruises. The taxicab received a jolt from a car driven by H. Fielding, who claims that he was far enough across the street intersection to have the right of way over Wilson's car.

Judge Wilbur of Los Angeles has been secured to deliver the principal address of Memorial Day. Miss Marcella Craft, the noted singer, will lead the congregational singing of "The Star Spangled Banner." She will be assisted by the Cantadores Club, comprising sixty male voices.

The question of securing one or more dry-farming experts for this district, and the stationing of one in the Moreno Valley, will be considered at a meeting to be held in the Chamber of Commerce rooms next Wednesday. IMPERIAL VALLEY URGES HIM TO SIGN BILLS FOR STATE ROADS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

EL CENTRO, May 22.—Chairman Arthur C. Shepard of the Board of Supervisors returned tonight from San Diego and brought word that the State Association of Supervisors in annual convention there had telegraphed a resolution to Gov. Johnson urging him to sign the bills passed by both branches of the Legislature appropriating $100,000 each for the road from Los Angeles to Brawley and the Sandhills route from here to Yuma.

The call for a highway bond election contains a provision for $500,000 for a paved highway between El Centro and Yuma and it is feared here that the administration forces plan to withhold the appropriation secured from the Legislature after a momentous fight and let the road building face the issue of a future election.

DEMANDS LARGE SUM FROM ALLEGED LOVE PIRATE LIVING IN CHINO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN BERNARDINO, May 22.—On the twenty-ninth anniversary of their marriage, Fred H. Merrill of Los Angeles today filed suit in the Superior Court against Joseph H. Riley, prominent Chino resident, for $20,000, which he believes is commensurate with the loss of his wife's love.

Several weeks ago Merrill secured a decree of divorce from his wife, and the suit against Riley, who is a member of the Board of Education of Chino and Deputy County Assessor, follows as a sensational sequence.

Merrill charges that Riley's influence over his former wife caused her to forget her marriage vows and her love, affection and respect for her husband.

The complaint cites that, as Merrill was "wrongfully deprived of the comfort, society and assistance," and Riley's actions made his home desolate, he is warranted in seeking $20,000 damages from the Chino man. H. H. Chase filed the suit.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, May 22.—Believing that conditions in Mexico will improve in a few months, local capitalists have decided to enter into the construction of steel motorships of light draft to ply between Southern California and Mexican ports, the vessels to be built at the plant of the Craig Shipbuilding Company.

The first of these boats, which will be 140 feet long, have a beam of twenty-four feet, will cost $100,000, and will be begun in the near future. It will be built by the California and Mexico Steamship Company of Long Beach, the incorporation papers of which concern were filed yesterday. The directors are Charles A. Wiley, president of the Exchange National Bank; Assemblyman J. A. Rominger, John Craig, Jr., E. O. Cutler and Frank W. Philpot.

The ship will be built so as to accommodate a varied cargo, including lumber and oil, and will have a capacity for 450 tons. This vessel will be the first motorship to be built on the Coast.

An army of women and children, which will have for its object the gaining of universal peace and which will be international in character, will be organized at the First Methodist Church here tomorrow. It is the idea of the pastor, Rev. H. I. Rasmus. He will call together the religious people of the city tomorrow evening at the church and the movement to secure the names of 10,000,000 mothers to a petition for lasting peace will be launched.

"It is not our idea or hope to end the present European conflict," said Dr. Rasmus, "but to ultimately prevent other wars in the future and to bring all the nations of the world to the Christian viewpoint, which does not tolerate war. The suffering of mothers and children of Europe makes it fitting that they lead in this peace movement."

The home of R. S. Nelson at No. 1973 East Ocean avenue was burglarized last evening and silverware and costly clothing to the value of $350 was taken. The screen of a rear window was jimmied by the intruders. The thieves overlooked jewelry valued at several hundred dollars in their haste to get away when they heard the occupants of the house returning.

NEW ELECTRIC LOOP.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

HIGHLAND, May 22.—That Highland and East Highland is soon to be connected by the Pacific Electric is the belief of the business men of this city. It is said that the Pacific Electric has made plans to extend the Highland line from San Bernardino to East Highland and Del Rosa on Mountain avenue. It is believed that the ultimate plan of the company is to make a loop by then extending the road to the Redlands line. Agents for the company have been at work getting a line on the freight business and this has increased the belief that the work is to be done soon.

SOUTHERN CROP REPORTS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SAN JACINTO, May 22.—Along with the bumper hay and grain crops of the San Jacinto Valley this year will be marketed the biggest fruit output ever produced here. Apricot and peach trees are loaded as they have never been before, while indications are that the olive crop will be far above the average.

Fruit growers declare that last year's labor problem in caring for the crop will be a pink-tea affair compared with the task the growers will be up against this year. Many orchardists are forearming themselves at this date by building additional drying facilities, while others are arranging to contract their fruit to outside canneries, as they are confident that the local cannery, notwithstanding enlarged capacity, will not be in a position to handle the crop.

The exceptionally late rains have kept the foothills and mountain ranges a mass of wild flowers, affording the best bee pasture in fifteen years. This condition will give the valley a honey flow greater than ever before experienced. Bee men estimate that no less than two trainloads of honey will be shipped out over the San Jacinto branch of the Santa Fe during the coming summer. One large apiarist estimates his own crop will amount to five carloads.

THINNING SEASON.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BANNING, May 22.—The thinning fruit season is here and, as peaches are now the size of filberts, they are being thinned in most of the orchards. The growers believe that it helps the tree and that they get just as good prices in the long run, as large peaches command more money. The apricots are of good size now and it is believed that some of the early fruit will be ripe in another two weeks.

There is great development in all kinds of fruit because of the warmer weather. The growers are already preparing for the harvest. It has been reported that there is fungus on the apricots and peaches in some parts of the State, but none has appeared here. The rains brought a goodly supply of food for the bees of the county, and the bee men are looking forward to one of the best years of the industry in this section.

ANNUAL APPLE SHOW.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

YUCAIPA, May 22.—David Coey has been made the general chairman of the committees which will arrange for the annual apple show this fall. Mr. Coey is to have direct charge of all the work, and the plans call for the greatest show ever held in the valley. The date has not been set, but it is probable that the show will be held in October. Exhibits are promised from the orchards of Yucaipa, Oakglen, Victorville, Seven Oaks and other sections.

The Finance Committee is hard at work now getting the finances in shape for the show. Other committees are to be appointed by Mr. Coey in the near future and will at once start their work. The women of the valley are planning to make one of the features of the show the exhibit of canned fruits, jellies and preserves of all kinds.

POMONA CANNERY.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, May 22.—The new plant of the Pomona Valley Canning Company, which has a larger floor space than any other building in the city, has just been completed at a cost of nearly $30,000. It is said to be the finest inland canning factory in Southern California. The structure is 350 feet long and 120 feet wide.

The plant was put up for the principal purpose of handling peaches and apricots. The apricot run will begin about June 20. It is estimated that the pay roll of the summer run will be close to $30,000. Boyd Hocker, for many years connected with the Waters Canning Company, will manage the new concern. H. A. Von Hemert, formerly of the Hemet Canning Company, will be superintendent.

UNUSUAL CROP.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

OXNARD, May 22.—Reports from the walnut growers of the county indicate an unusually large crop. One orchardist says the walnuts are setting in clusters like grapes on the trees, clusters of 8 to 12 nuts being very common. The prospect for a good season pleases growers, as last year's crop was small, and that of the season before almost ruined by a hot wave.

The walnut aphid is working in some of the Santa Paula orchards, and there is a heavy dropping of the nuts, but measures are being taken to control the blight and it is not believed that it will affect the crop seriously.

CURED FRUIT.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VISALIA, May 22.—The Visalia Cured Fruit Exchange has been organized with a membership of twenty of the leading deciduous fruit growers of this district. J. K. Tuttle has been elected president and Mrs. Inez Crow secretary. Articles of incorporation are to be filed without delay.

The local organization is to be affiliated with the California Cured Fruit Exchange and it is stated by the officers that a practical control of the local markets will be secured within the next few weeks.

APRICOT CROP.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

NORDHOFF, May 22.—There is every indication that the apricot crop in this district will outdo all previous years. The set on the trees is extremely heavy and the prospect for excellent quality was never better.

A Better Substitute.

[St. Louis Globe Democrat:] While we do not like to side with an Englishman against an American citizen, we can't help thinking that King George's barley water is a better substitute than Mr. Bryan's grape juice.

The newspaper men were taken to San Gabriel in special Pacific Electric cars, accompanied by a committee representing the paper supply houses of the city.

HE ADMITS HE IS MUCH-HUNTED MAN

WANTED BECAUSE OF SLAYING OF WIFE HERE—NEAR DEATH IN TEXAS.

During a rational period in his delirium, the 70-year-old man who was taken to the Providence Hospital, El Paso, with two legs amputated by a switch engine, admitted last night he is E. P. Orr of Los Angeles, wanted by the local police in connection with the death of his wife the 13th inst. Immediately following this confession the man relapsed into unconsciousness.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson of No. 739 Gladys street, Long Beach, a daughter of E. P. Orr, said last night she is now convinced the mortally injured man lying in the El Paso hospital is her father. She would not comment upon the murder of her mother.

Mrs. Lawrence McMullen of No. 2139 East Eighth street, Long Beach, another daughter of Mr. Orr, could not be found last night. While Mrs. Richardson declared she would not go to El Paso, she thought her sister, Mrs. McMullen, might have left yesterday upon learning of the second tragedy apparently in the family.

The local police department will take no action in the case unless Mr. Orr recovers. It was said at the El Paso hospital the man cannot live.

IN TROUBLE; ENDS LIFE.

Member of Park Force, Said to Have had Domestic Woe, Dies of Poison.

Despondent over family trouble, C. W. Joslin, 40 years of age, a member of the Los Angeles park force, took his life by swallowing poison early last night. He bought the poison at drug store and then rented a room at No. 129 East Fourth street. He was discovered by the landlady in a dying condition and was taken to the Receiving Hospital, where he died.

Police who investigated were unable to gain much information about Mr. Joslin. According to them, he has been employed about the city parks a number of years. His wife has been sick some time and, according to the police, he has had other troubles.

SKULL FRACTURED.

Automobile Strikes Chinaman's Wagon, Wrecking Both Vehicles and Severely Injuring the Celestial.

An automobile driven by Andrew Lucas of No. 4260 Western avenue crashed into the rear of the wagon of Luck Tie, a Chinaman, of No. 1271 Temple street, early last night at Sixth and Bixel streets. The automobile was wrecked, the Chinaman's wagon smashed and the Chinaman thrown to the pavement and seriously injured. At the Receiving Hospital, where Luck was treated, he was found to be suffering from a fracture of the skull and other injuries.

The accident was investigated by Detectives Winn and Beaumont. After questioning Mr. Lucas they released him. The Chinaman, according to the doctors, will live.

STILL HOLDING ON.

Squatter on Huntington Estate Says He'll Fight—Must Get out, Declares Other Side.

Unless Kenneth Wallace, squatter de luxe, has removed himself, bag and baggage, from his six-acre "homestead" on the El Molino ranch by Monday morning, Attorney James A. Gibson, counsel for the Huntington Land and Improvement Company, says he will have him forcibly ejected.

"Wallace's application to purchase has been rejected by the local Land Office," said Attorney Gibson last night. "He is nothing more nor less than a common trespasser and will be treated as such. If he refuses to move peacefully he will be arrested for malicious and willful damage to property."

Attorneys for the Huntington interests prepared a complaint yesterday to restrain Mr. Wallace from remaining longer on the estate, but this does not appear to be bothering the "de luxe squatter." Broiling his bacon over a cheering wood fire, Mr. Wallace peacefully rounded out the day in his camp in the middle of San Marino city. He said he was fully expecting to be dispossessed, and fully determined to make a fight.

TRIP HUNGARIAN STEPS.

Chief of Police and Wife of Judge Lead Grand March at Benefit Dance.

The Hungarian national dance, the "czardas," danced by those present, was the feature of the entertainment and dance given last night by the Hungarian Civic League in Moose Hall, No. 111 West Third street. Chief Sebastian and Mrs. Thomas P. White, wife of the police judge, led the grand march.

The league is composed of Hungarian business men and was formed for the purpose of aiding Hungarian residents and immigrants. S. Stark is president and Oscar M. A. Rona secretary. The proceeds of last night's dance will go towards acquiring new quarters for the league. Mr. Rona said last night a good sum had been realized.

CRITICALLY ILL.

Mrs. L. L. Lawrence, whose hip was recently broken by a fall due to her blindness, is critically ill at the home of her daughter at No. 1660 West Thirty-fifth street.

Catastrophe.

FOUR KILLED IN EXPLOSION.

DYNAMITE IN AUTOMOBILE IS SUDDENLY IGNITED.

Three People Fatally Injured in an Accident at Syracuse, N. Y., When an Attempt was to be Made to Bring Body to Surface of the Water.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) May 22.—Four were killed, three fatally injured, and seventeen others seriously injured here this afternoon, when an automobile load of dynamite, to be used to search for the body of a drowned boy, exploded. Several women are among the injured. Windows were blown out of nearby factories and shreds of bodies and clothing were thrown on telephone wires and scattered for a distance of 150 feet.

The dead are:

FRANK ROSS, of Brewerston, in charge of the dynamite.

JAMES HUGHES, county morgue attendant.

VINCENT GZENLEHWS, aged 14, and an unidentified baby boy.

The baby was in the arms of his sister, who was standing near the automobile at the time of the explosion and who is dying from her injuries.

About seventy-five sticks of dynamite were in the automobile and several persons were standing near the car, which was blown to pieces.

Morgue attendants and others were searching for the body of Donald Willex, aged 3, who was drowned early in the week by falling into a flume. The dynamite was to be used in an effort to bring the child's body to the surface. The Coroner has started an investigation.

EXPOSITION CONCERT.

All tastes were considered by Director Tandler in arranging his programme for the concert this afternoon at Exposition Park by the Los Angeles City and County Band. The lighter numbers are in the majority, although there are several of heavier caliber. Beginning at 2 o'clock the following programme will be rendered: Voluntary (Batiste,) "First Brigade I.N.G.C. March" (Weldon,) "Mon Reve Valse" (Waldteufel,) (a) "Cavatina" (Raff,) (b) "Morris Dance" (Watson,) "Martha Overture" (Flotow,) "Upidee" (paraphrase) (Tracy,) "Celebrated Minuet" (Paderewski,) selection "Sari" (Kalman,) "Kuyawiak—Polish National Dance" (Wieniawski,) United States of America National March (Panella.)

How American Women May Keep Faces Young

"The American smart woman ages early, far earlier than the English woman," says Christian Miller, F.C.I., the famous English health expert. She adds that our climate "so exhilarates that you over-exert yourselves and grow old before you know it. That same exhilarating air dries the skin. The skin that lacks moisture grows pale and withered looking and soon forms wrinkles."

"The American complexion" is best treated by applying pure mercolized wax, which causes the faded, lifeless cuticle to flake off in minute particles, a little each day, until the fresh, young skin beneath is wholly in evidence. Every druggist has this wax; one ounce is sufficient. Spread on at night like cold cream, washing it off next morning.

For wrinkles, dissolve an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel; bathe the face in this. Immediately every wrinkle is affected, even the deeper lines. Both treatments are remarkable facial rejuvenators.

THE WEATHER.
[Official Report.]

LOCAL OFFICE, U. S. WEATHER BUREAU, Los Angeles, May 22.—[Reported by Ford A. Carpenter, Local Forecaster.] At 5 o'clock a.m. the barometer registered 29.98; at 5 p.m., 29.89. Thermometer for the corresponding hours showed 53 deg. and 64 deg. Relative humidity, 5 a.m., 90 per cent.; 5 p.m., 70 per cent. Wind, 5 a.m., northeast, velocity 6 miles; 5 p.m., southwest, velocity 9 miles. Highest temperature, 69 deg.; lowest, 52 deg. Rainfall for season, 17.66 inches. Barometer reduced to sea level.

WEATHER CONDITIONS.—The barometric pressure is steadily increasing over the United States as Friday's depression is passing seaward along the St. Lawrence River Valley and is being replaced by areas of high pressure from the West and Southeast. Heavy rain occurred at Memphis (1.14 inches) and moderate amounts are reported from Missouri, Minnesota and in the New England States. The presence of the area of high pressure over the Middle West caused frosts in Wyoming and Colorado. The barometer remains stationary over the Pacific Coast, indicating a continuance of fair weather for Los Angeles and vicinity for another thirty-six hours, with intervals of cloud or fog.

LOCAL FORECAST.

For Los Angeles and vicinity: Fair, except for intervals of cloud or fog, Sunday; northwesterly winds.

For Southern California: Fair Sunday.

STATE FORECAST.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—Weather forecast:

San Francisco and vicinity: Fair Sunday; moderate west wind.

Sacramento, Santa Clara and San Joaquin valleys: Fair Sunday; light northwest wind.

Southern California: Fair Sunday; light west wind.

ARIZONA FORECAST.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Forecast for Arizona: Generally fair Sunday and Monday.

BREEDS NEW CARNATIONS.

Santa Monica Man, After Ten Years' Experimentation, Evolves Bluish Bloom, the Amalya Schoene.

As a result of ten years' experimentation and study in horticultural centers of Europe, in Boston, University of Wisconsin and latterly in the University of California, Berkeley, by Albert V. Amet, Santa Monica plant breeder and florist, comes a new carnation creation to the fore of popular attention, Amalya Schoene, or Amalya Beautiful.

Upon the little Isle of Ruegen in the Baltic the quest was started nine years ago which has produced one of the most pleasing combinations of red and blue tones in the carnation realm, according to Prof. Babcock of U.C., under whom Mr. Amet has been at work. After the first crossings in a series of experiments the field becomes peculiarly an unexplored territory for the hybridizer. The great elusive prize of the carnation men of the world has been to create a true blue color, and it was through a pursuit of the elusive will o' wisp that this new bloom was evolved. The color is an indescribable brilliance of cerise red with just enough blue in the depths to create an altogether new combination. It has been said to be one step beyond the recent Gorgeous carnation, more livelier on the whole and under artificial lighting delicately enhanced. The perfume is just strong enough to attract. It is the result of a cross of a known red and an unknown purple type of carnation.

MRS. MARIE L. COLWELL

MRS. COLWELL TO DELIVER FREE LECTURE

Prominent Expert on Gardening and Intensive Cultivation to Give Talk Tuesday Evening.

Mrs. Marie L. Colwell, who has become well known throughout Southern California for her eminent success in gardening and intensive cultivation, has been engaged by the Angeles Mesa Land Co. to deliver a free lecture on this subject Tuesday evening, May 25th, in the large ground floor lecture hall of the company at 433 South Hill Street.

Mrs. Colwell has demonstrated in a most interesting manner, the substantial profits that can be realized from an acre of ground by applying efficient, business methods. Her talk does not deal in generalities, but in specific facts—being an outline of the methods she has learned to employ through her extensive experience along this line. It would be impossible to overestimate the value of Mrs. Colwell's advice and suggestions to anyone engaged in gardening or to anyone interested in this attractive subject. The lecture will begin promptly at 7:45 p.m. Mrs. Colwell's lecture is given under the auspices of the Angeles Mesa Land Co., owners of San Fernando Mission Lands, lying at the mouth of the famous Owens River aqueduct. A well-known authority on land values recently said that annexation of San Fernando Valley increased the value of these lands $200 to $400 an acre.

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist, of London, England, may be consulted at 322 SOUTH SPRING STREET, by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND READINGS, FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigations along psychological lines that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT information.

PALMISTRY HONESTLY PRACTICED WILL NOT tell your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life. Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL. MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

HAVE YOU EVER BOUGHT A USED CAR FROM A RESPONSIBLE FIRM SUCH AS EARLE C. ANTHONY, INC.?

We are handling used cars because we have to, owing to the great and increasing demand for Packard and Chalmers cars. We haven't any "junk" or wornout cars in our entire second-hand establishment. We let those that insist on getting "something for nothing" buy these cars from the man "who was suddenly called East."

Every car taken in by us is thoroughly gone over in a technical examination before it is appraised. We don't make "long trades" nor give large allowances. We take a car in for what it is actually worth and sell it at that figure after it is thoroughly overhauled and newly painted in our shops, and guarantee it by putting our name plate on it.

If you are intending to buy a second-hand car, go and look at some of these "great bargains" that are advertised and then see what we can offer you. Seeing these cars and riding in them means that nine times out of ten you'll buy one. And remember that we stand back of every car that goes out of our establishment.

Following are a few of the real, genuine bargains in "up-to-now" cars that carry the stamp and guarantee of EARLE C. ANTHONY, INC.:

1914 Packard "48," 7-passenger touring car	$2750
1914 Chalmers Master six, 5-passenger	$1450
1914 Pope-Hartford, 5-passenger	$1200
1914 Overland, 5-passenger touring car	$700

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION—

THE ART OF SINGING—
Voice culture is an asset which cannot be valued in dollars and cents. From a health standpoint alone it is a necessity. The deep breathing that singing demands makes red blood, quiets the nerves and gives correct poise to the body. It will compel you to sing more beautifully, therefore enable you to take your place as a vocal artist.
We recommend our singers to good positions when they are qualified.
Convincing lessons free by appointment. Call any afternoon and let us see what may be done for you.
An interview will cost you nothing and it may mean much to you. Lessons given before and after business hours if desired.
Arrangements may be made by which students may take daily lessons, therefore they will not need to practice at home or need a piano in their hotel or apartment.

Want an Outing?

BOYS EARN VACATIONS ON CATALINA ISLAND.

You Can be a "Times" Camp Guest in Avalon Four Days by Getting Only Six New Subscribers for One Month and Thereafter Until Ordered Stopped—No Money to Collect.

NEWS of The Times vacation camp at Avalon, Santa Catalina Island, is being spread far and wide through "Boyville." It comes to the lads, weary with the fag end of the school year, and longing for an outing, like a breath from the sweetest rose, or a slab of pie to a boy's empty stomach.

Best of all, it lies within the reach of every boy in Southern California who has the least little bit of hustling ability, to win for himself the right to be a guest at The Times Camp and to enjoy all of its privileges and entertainments.

It's so easy that already a considerable number of boys have secured their vacations, and are looking forward with joyful anticipation to the fun in store for them. All you have to do is to get six new subscription contracts for one month and thereafter until ordered discontinued, and that entitles you to four days at the vacation camp, with all expenses paid from the time of leaving Los Angeles to the return.

FINE CLUB OFFER.

The Times finds that in some cases boys of a school, club, Sunday-school or neighborhood want to go together. Well, that is provided for also. And it gives a special advantage.

If there are boys of a club, school, Sunday-school or neighborhood who want to go together and have a special tent and table places in The Times Camp, they can work together for the required number of subscription contracts and thereby win a place for an extra person as their leader. For each club of seven boys or more a place will be provided for the extra person, who will have all the privileges of the other guests.

If boys want to go together, they can be accommodated by beds in tents grouped together, and by places together at the tables.

The Times has entertained fully 3300 boys at its Catalina Camp during the four seasons this has been operated. Every lad of them will tell of the fine attractions of this camp—the good food, the comfortable cots, with each boy to his own separate bed; the jolly hikes in the hills; the daily sport in the water, the games and the cracking fine evening entertainments—and the kindly care of the attendants.

The camp can accommodate fifty boys at a time. Trips will be made twice a week, Mondays and Thursdays. The trip to San Pedro is made by motor car, and then comes the fascinating boat trip across the channel—and then the delights of Avalon and The Times Camp.

In 1911, the first year of the camp, 850 boys were its guests. In 1912 there were 700 boys who took advantage of the vacation offer, and in 1913 and 1914 about 900 each season were entertained. This speaks for itself—and every one of these guests is a Times Camp booster.

GET BUSY NOW.

If you haven't yet started, call at The Times office or write and get a bunch of those card subscription contracts, and then get busy. Send the contracts as fast as you get one of them filled out, and almost before you know it you've earned your vacation, with all expenses paid.

To parents, The Times would say that the most careful attention is given the boys in camp and on the way. Experienced persons are placed in charge, to maintain a kindly yet firm discipline and to see that the boys do not get into danger. Each boy is put on his honor to act as a gentleman, and the boys are true to their trust. An outing in The Times Camp will be a fine thing for your boy. It will help to develop his manly qualities and give him an ideal outdoor vacation. The work of securing the required new subscriptions is also useful to him to develop his self-confidence and business ability. It's good from all points of view, and you will do well to encourage your boy to win one of these outings. The Times will give all particulars desired.

Persons interested in forming clubs such as outlined above from schools, Sunday-schools, etc., can make special arrangements with the manager of The Times Camp for accommodations in one body, if desired. The camp is always open to inspection, as to its method of caring for its guests and its accommodations. It is the ideal vacation opportunity, and best of all, each boy can earn his outing by his own efforts.

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY—

[The hour for closing many of the columns in The Times "Liner" Section Saturday night is 8 o'clock. Subsequent to this hour, developments often occur in commercial and domestic affairs which make it necessary to seek quick and effective publicity. Therefore, this "Too Late to Classify" column often offers greater bargains and more money-making opportunities than any other section of The Times.]

PLANS WELLS IN FULLERTON.

UNION KEEPS BUSY IN SOUTHERN DISTRICT—DEVELOPMENT NOTES.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

FULLERTON, May 21.—The Union Oil Company has started six new wells in the Fullerton fields since the first of the year and is now employing 300 men hereabouts. It is planning more new work for this year.

The well on the McComber ranch three miles northwest of Fullerton is being abandoned. The hole was put down 5290 feet but no oil strike was made, although there were some indications at a depth of about 3000 feet. The well is near the Emery ranch.

The Amalgamated is building a rig for a new well northwest of its present wells.

Many of the wells put on the pump on the Puente lease over twenty-five years ago are still good producers, while some of the wells in the Olinda district, drilled about ten years ago, show but a slight decrease in output every year.

After many months' work the Standard has shut off the water in the Lemke well.

A rig is being erected in the hills northwest of town for a well in new territory. The name of the company behind the proposition has not been made public.

The great "gasser" on the Murphy lease was turned loose two nights this week for a "blow off." The gas pressure is very heavy and it is believed the one well would supply enough gas for a city of 250,000 population.

Drillers are busy on nearly all of the leases in the Fullerton field except on the Santa Fe lease in the old Olinda district.

In Memoriam.

SERVICES FOR MR. FROHMAN.

SPECIAL PROGRAMME AT THE MASON OPERAHOUSE.

Many will do Honor Tuesday to the Memory of Late Theatrical Magnate, Who was Interested in Los Angeles House—At Same Time as Funeral Rites in East.

Memorial services for the late Charles Frohman, the theatrical magnate, whose life was lost in the Lusitania disaster, will be held at the Mason Operahouse, of which he was one of the lessees, on Tuesday, between 10:30 and 11:20 a.m. The services will be free, and open to the public, all who care to attend and pay a last tribute to Mr. Frohman's memory being invited. They have been arranged by Manager W. T. Wyatt of the Mason, in connection with similar services held in every city where there is a theater in which Mr. Frohman was interested, or where one of the companies under his management is playing. The services are timed to correspond with the actual funeral services to be held in New York City at the same hours, and will be attended here by Miss Maude Adams and her company, which is a Frohman attraction, she foregoing her usual performance that night, as will be done similarly everywhere in the United States.

The services will be brief, but thrilling. An orchestra of twenty pieces, under the direction of B. F. Meine, will play; there will be vocal and instrumental solos, and short addresses by well-known divines. All the theaters of the city will be represented on the stage by their managers and staffs and many will close their box offices during the services. The programme follows:

Opening prayer, Rev. Dr. Baker P. Lee, pastor of Christ Episcopal Church.

"Funeral March" (Chopin) and overture, "Summer Night's Dream" (Suppe,) orchestra.

Remarks, Rev. Dr. S. Hecht, pastor Temple B'nai B'rith.

Solo, "The Prayer," from "La Tosca," by request, Mrs. Constance Balfour.

"Asa's Death," from Peer Gynt Suite by Greig stringed orchestra.

Solo, "Recessional" (De Koven,) Miss Alice Lohr; accompanist, Miss Nellie L. O'Donoughue.

Saxophone solo, Aria from "Mefistofolo" (Boito,) Sgr. Raulo Parmegiani.

Remarks, Rev. Dr. Franci, pastor First Baptist Church.

Solo, "The Song of Victory" (Frederick Stevenson,) Roland Paul; accompanist Miss Nellie L. O'Donoughue.

Hymn, "Nearer My God, to Thee," orchestra and audience.

KING NO MORE, IS DEPORTED.

RULER OF OLD TENDERLOIN IS A DOWN-AND-OUTER.

After Long and Costly Fight Notorious Character is Started on His Way to France with His Consort—May Have to Enlist—Others Also en Route.

Joe Goldberg, alias Joe Durand, and a half-dozen other aliases acquired in France, South Africa and Los Angeles, during the administration of Mayor Harper known as the man it was necessary to do "business" with in order to be safe, and who posed during that time as one of the undisputed rulers of the local tenderloin, was taken East yesterday, under orders of deportation for his native France.

The departure of Durand marks the end of a long contest to remain in this country, while charges that he was an undesirable alien and lived on the earnings of a prostitute, were being investigated by the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is believed that Durand, the name by which he was known in Los Angeles, spent many thousand dollars trying to defeat his deportation. It is known that from a position of semi-affluence financially, he was not only bent but broken, the money going to attorneys for his defense, and the preparation of evidence for submission to the Washington authorities.

Accompanying Durand was Jeanne Nantet, better known as Marcella Royer, who came with Durand to Los Angeles in 1900, after the latter had been sent out of Durban, Natal, South Africa, for white slave practices. For years the woman posed as Durand's housekeeper at No. 726 North Alameda street, and No. 428 East Third street, when as a matter of fact she conducted a disorderly house, and Durand lived on the income.

Durand is a Russian Jew, and had a criminal record in Paris, as far back as 1888, when he was found guilty of robbery and sent out of the country. During the Boer War he went to South Africa, and was active in Durban in criminal circles, being sent out of that country in 1900, and coming direct from Africa to Los Angeles, where he has been since.

In the hey-day of his political power Durand was one of the men who had to be reckoned with, but yesterday afternoon none of his old-time friends called to say good-by. Durand has been in jail for several months, his bondsmen, who qualified in his behalf for $5000, surrendering him to the officers. The woman was at liberty on $1000 bond, and she appeared promptly at the office of Capt. Connell, who has had the case in charge since its inception, ready for the long trip.

Information of the proceedings against Durand here has been sent to the French government, and it is understood that he will be given an opportunity to enlist in the army and do service in behalf of his country.

Other deportations yesterday were William Johnson, who conducted a house of prostitution at No. 560 North Hill street, and who goes to England, and Lorenzo Verderone, similarly charged in connection with No. 111 West Commercial street, who will have an opportunity to enlist under the Italian colors.

NEW INDUSTRY.

The newest factory project at Vernon is that calling for the erection of an extensive plant by the Buttonlath Manufacturing Company. The plant will consist of a main factory building 250x120 feet in size and a warehouse 200x50 feet in ground dimensions. Both will be of frame and corrugated iron construction. The company will make an investment of about $30,000.

expects to build in place bungalow that clings a magnificent home that remarkable in many ways It will be designed by architects in the United will be constructed so that the garden, "just as grown there," as Mr.

For five years Mr. Hart lived quietly at his country home and all that time he collected and collected. The four corners of the earth were scoured for rare plants and trees—the Arctic circles and the tropical jungles. All lands have contributed to this garden, until now there are hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of varieties of flora growing in the open air in California, though botanists have declared this growth impossible.

Mr. Hart kept his garden and its progress locked up in his own breast, a beautiful secret. He was not ready for the world to learn of his work until he was absolutely certain he would be successful. The almost impregnable location of his estate made secrecy easy. The garden is no farther from the business district of Pasadena than the Busch Gardens. Yet there were not a dozen people in Southern California who knew of its existence.

As a matter of fact, so peculiarly situated is this garden that you could pass within a stone's throw of it a million times and never be aware of its whereabouts. The owner of this lordly estate can look all over Pasadena without any one looking at him.

The garden is situated on a jutting spur of the mountains a little east of Altadena, and is surrounded on three sides by deep canyons with precipitous sides. Only to those looking back as they climbed the Mt. Wilson trail was this Garden of Mystery visible. And even they, looking again for it on their return, were unable to determine its exact location.

The spur on which the garden is situated juts out from the mountain like a giant's extended hand, and is split into five smaller spurs. In the canyons so formed forests of rare trees have been planted.

APPROACH SUBTLY HIDDEN.

The only approach to the garden is from the rear, and even this approach is subtly hidden. A short distance up the Villa road, before one reaches Sierra Madre Villa, a little lane leads through an orange grove. Follow it a short distance and pass through a rose-covered portal, and you are in the most wonderful garden in the world.

Never in the history of the world have so many varieties of flowers and trees been gathered together in one place. In twenty years, when the pine canyons have become huge forests and the tropical flowers thoroughly acclimatized, Mr. Hart's garden will be one of the show places of the world.

When Mr. Hart decided to develop an out-doors garden on a large scale, he first purchased every book he could find on horticulture, and after studying them thoroughly, made out a list of the flowers and trees he would need at the start. This list he took to the leading nurserymen, intent on purchases.

The nurserymen just laughed. In the first place, they said, there were no such plants in the United States; and even if there were they certainly wouldn't grow out of doors.

Mr. Hart said he later had the pleasure of taking one of these nurserymen the fruit from a mango tree the nurseryman had vowed would never grow in California.

Some other trees wanted were to be found only in the densest tropical jungles of South America.

"Do you know," said the nurseryman, "that in the places where these trees grow the temperature is never below 75 degrees, and it rains in feet instead of inches?"

"That's all right," said Mr. Hart.

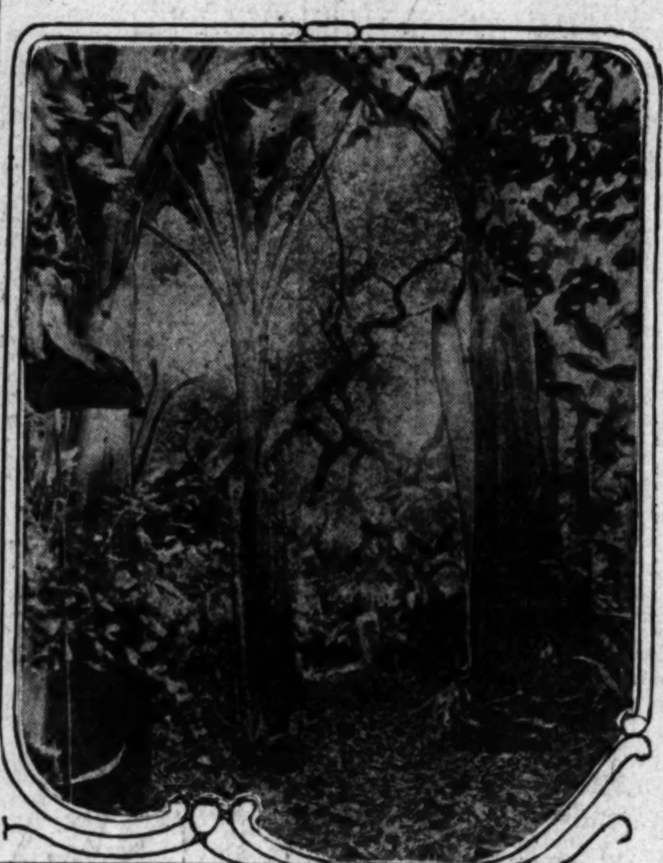
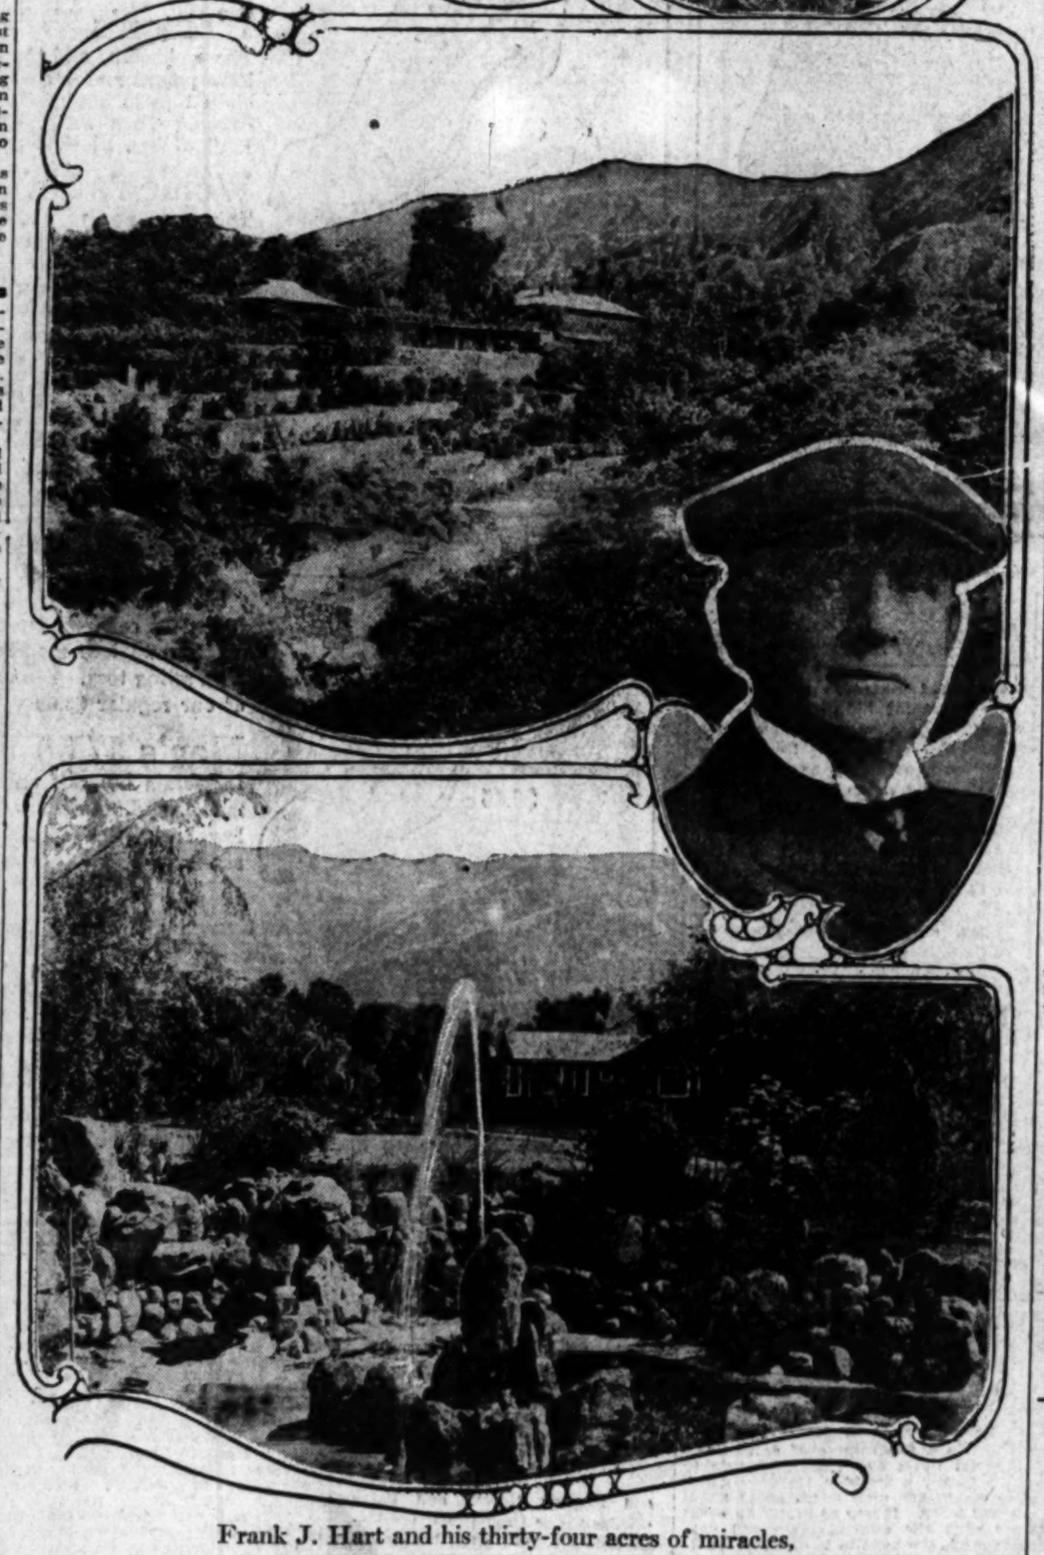
Most Wonderful Garden in the World.





Frank J. Hart and his thirty-four acres of miracles,

Just "discovered" right on the edge of Pasadena. Trees, shrubs and plants from all over the earth are growing here and Federal experts say the collection is without an equal. In this remarkable setting Mr. Hart intends soon to rear a mansion. The upper picture shows a bit of the tropical jungle, in which is the largest variety of rare tropical ferns and trees growing outdoors in the United States. The next view conveys an idea of how the canyons have been terraced and utilized as gardens. Here every kind of deciduous fruit known to man is grown. The building on the left is Mr. Hart's den, where all his garden schemes are concocted. The larger building is the garage. Between are blacksmith shops, fire department, carpenters' shops and gardeners' quarters. In the lower picture is the Hart temporary bungalow home and the Japanese water gardens. All the stones were selected and marked by Japanese experts before they were carried down from the mountains.

Interplayground Event.

CHILDREN'S MAY FETE DELIGHTS THOUSANDS.

ALL the children in the world—nearly—participated in a great May fete yesterday at the Hazard Playground, and gave 5000 spectators a foretaste of their own gladsome activities in the day when the millennium shall come sliding down the milky way into our midst. At least, there were a good many who envied the children their buoyant verve in pantomines and Maypole and other dances.

In all, an estimated 2500 children from eight different playgrounds took part in the affair. The estimate is made for the reason that counting children on an occasion like this is a good deal like trying to enumerate the motes in a sunbeam. They flowed as an alluvial tide into the playground precincts from Pacific Electric trains, from sagging "jitney" busses, and from equally sagging carryalls that had been requisitioned for the transportation of the children from favored neighborhoods.

As for the programme, it was diverse and pleasing. At least every number got salvos of applause from the spectators that were seated, amphitheater-like, along the sides of the surrounding hills, and not all of it was the product of doting parents, of whom, needless to say, there were many present. The playgrounds represented were Hazard, Violet, Echo, Recreation Center, Slauson, Downey, Exposition Park and Normal Hill Center. Superintendent C. B. Raitt and Assistant Superintendent George Sim of the Los Angeles Playground Department were in charge, assisted by a full score of instructors.

THE PROGRAMME.

Following strains of uplifting music from the 1915 City and County Band, the affair got under way at 2 o'clock by the raising of the American flag by two pretty girls. Cheers broke forth as "Old Glory" broke to the breeze, and everybody present stood to attention as the band played the "Star Spangled Banner."

TAPPING SALOON TILLS FOR WHIFFEN FUND.

But President of the Council Declines to Accept the Money.

Contributions Raised by Retail Liquor Dealers Spent for Candidate Through Hellman Building Office. Whiffen Rejects Check and Refuses to Extend Zone or Lower Licenses if Elected.

REPORTS that funds were solicited in more than 100 saloons by officers of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, for use in the Mayoralty campaign of President Whiffen of the City Council were admitted to be true yesterday by Secretary Merrill of the association.

Mr. Whiffen said that a check for $250, signed by a saloon-keeper, was offered him by E. J. Delorey, then on a Whiffen committee.

"I refused to take the check," said Mr. Whiffen. "They are not my crowd. I refused to lend my influence to extend the liquor zone or to cut down the saloon license. I told President Conrad and the other members of the saloon committee that I was in favor of giving the saloon a square deal, the same as any other business.

"Offers of money were made, but were not accepted, so far as I know. I understand they indorsed me for Mayor, but I promised them nothing for that indorsement."

The effort to force campaign contributions upon Mr. Whiffen, followed by the open indorsement of the candidate by the saloon-keepers, was a big political sensation yesterday.

Mr. Whiffen said he had been accused on the one hand of being a "longhair" and on the other of taking saloon money.

Campaign Manager Snowden said that an offer of financial assistance was made to him by certain officers of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, but that he refused the money.

Secretary J. T. Merrill of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association denies that an offer was made to Mr. Snowden or to Mr. Whiffen, but admits that Whiffen collections were made at several saloons, the proprietors of which are members of the association. He said the money so collected was used to send out Whiffen literature, and did not exceed $450.

INDORSES WHIFFEN.

The Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, containing 137 members, indorsed the president of the Council after a committee consisting of President Conrad, Secretary Merrill and a bartender named Mills waited upon Mr. Whiffen. At the same time a large number of individual saloon men are working energetically for Sebastian.

Campaign Manager Snowden yesterday admitted that the breach between himself and a number of other leaders of the Whiffen campaign was caused when he insisted that E. J. Delorey and Charles Alexander be eliminated from activity in Mr. Whiffen's behalf.

Delorey and Alexander made a number of collections for the Whiffen fund, among the collections being contributions from saloon-keepers and pawnbrokers. Mr. Snowden denies that he knew any of the money turned in by these men was saloon money. He did know, however, of a check for $100 from Morris Cohn, a pawnbroker. This check never did reach Whiffen headquarters, but its equivalent in coin trickled into the hands of Treasurer Zahn several days late.

Delorey, Alexander and N. W. Tilton, a saloon-keeper of San Pedro, met in conference with Mr. Whiffen in the presence of a high city official, and in the latter's office, at which time assurances were given Tilton, the boss liquor merchant of the harbor district, that Mr. Whiffen is not a "longhair," as has been popularly supposed.

It is charged that Delorey attempted to get Mr. Whiffen to accept a campaign contribution from a saloonkeeper and failing in that, they offered to place the "slush fund" in a safe deposit box and give him the key. This also was balked, and afterward it was discovered that a "plant" with a flashlight camera had been rigged up for Mr. Whiffen.

Following the exposure of Delorey and Alexander, Councilman Snowden refused to have anything further to do with the campaign until they were eliminated. They were, and the campaign was resumed, immediately after the primaries. At no time, however, did Alexander appear at headquarters.

A new face appeared more frequently at Whiffen headquarters, after the primary. It was the urbane countenance of one W. M. Humphreys, who is considered a level-headed liberalist, and at the same time an extremely close-mouthed personage when it comes to imparting knowledge he doesn't want circulated.

Mr. Humphreys denied any connection whatever with the alleged campaign contributions, or the saloon indorsement of Mr. Whiffen.

The latter said yesterday that he was waited upon by a committee of saloon-keepers headed by President Conrad. He informed them, he said, that he believed in giving the saloonkeeper a square deal the same as any other business man. He denied that he promised to use his influence toward extending the present zone or toward lowering the license $25 a month.

He said he would stand on his platform to abolish espionage and drive out stool pigeons who entice people to crime in order to arrest them.

ASSOCIATION'S SIDE.

Secretary Merrill and others connected with the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association deny that they insisted upon any promise before they gave their indorsement to Mr. Whiffen.

"The reason the majority of the saloon-keepers indorsed Mr. Whiffen is because in Mr. Sebastian's platform a statement is made that most of the crime in Los Angeles is traceable to liquor. They didn't like that. A committee waited upon Mr. Whiffen and the interview seemed to satisfy the committee, for the association indorsed Mr. Whiffen. Now, all this talk about great sums of money donated by saloon-keepers is bunk. The only funds we collected were jointly for association dues, expenses sending delegates to the Royal Arch convention, and enough to circulate literature for Mr. Whiffen."

Saloon-keepers who have been approached by emissaries of the association and alleged representatives of Mr. Whiffen said yesterday that they were notified that Mr. Whiffen is an "open town" man and that assessments were being levied upon all saloons "to put him over." The assessments levied, according to the story, varied from $25 to $100, depending Rarest of Growths Here.

"I'll create that environment right here in California, out of doors."

And he did. He secured the trees and invented a spraying apparatus that literally poured water on them. And the trees flourished to the utter amazement and consternation of the nurserymen.

Some of the most common of the native California plants were the hardest to obtain. Many shrubs that grow wild here had to be purchased in Germany. Mr. Hart made such a rumpus among the nurserymen that a great many dealers finally got busy and put them in stock.

He now has the finest and largest collection of native flora in California, the government having helped him farm it.

ORIGINAL PLAN.

Mr. Hart has evolved an absolutely original conception of what a California garden should be. He is not interested in hothouse plants, beautiful though they may be. He is interested only in a demonstration of what range of flowers, shrubs and trees will grow out of doors in California.

So on a plat of land the size of an average front yard grow and thrive together a juniper tree from tropical Africa; a cypress tree from the frozen wastes of Alaska; a cypress which first reared its head on a sunny island of the South Seas; a gaunt and toughened cedar from the snowy heights of the Himalayan Mountains, and a fabled cedar of Lebanon. All seem perfectly satisfied with their Californian environment.

Every species of the conifer known can be found growing in one of the canyons of the magnificent estate. The conifers are the great family of cone-bearers.

FROM EARTH'S FAR CORNERS.

One of these, the taxidium, came from the parent tree in the gardens of the National Palace of Mexico, at Chapultepec. Another, the deodar, came from the heights of the Himalayas in India. This is the tree made famous by Kipling. Others came from Central Africa, Alaska, Patagonia and Siberia. From every clime on the globe they have been gathered, and they are all thriving luxuriantly in Conifer Canyon.

In another of the canyons, known as Acacia Canyon, are growing together 275 varieties of acacia. Some of these are giants, others are merely shrubs. On a still night the odor of the acacia blossoms wafting up the canyon is almost overpowering. Each month in the year some one of these acacias is in bloom.

Every kind of citrus fruit that has so far been discovered occupies one corner of this wonderful garden. There are lemons that grow as big as your head, and oranges that grow as small as your little finger nail. Some grow into large trees, other trees are full grown when they are a foot high.

Some of the lemons look just like oranges and some of the oranges look just like lemons. And some of the citrons are so bitter that one taste will put the taster out of business for a week.

In one of the canyons have been built retaining walls that are terraced one above another. On these terraces he has planted every kind of deciduous fruit that has ever been discovered, including apples, peaches, plums, cherries, prunes and so on.

These trees are arranged in the order in which they come into bearing—the early ones first and the later ones last.

One of the strangest features is the tropical jungle, where has been created an environment for rare tropical trees and plants identical with that found on the banks of the Amazon. Here are banana trees, Alocasias, ginger treee, marantas, all kinds of lilies, extremely rare idesias, thousands of varieties of rare tropical ferns and myriads of radiantly beautiful flowers.

When a photographer was recently taking pictures in this jungle he lost his way and wandered around for nearly half an hour in the dense growth before he could find his way out.

There are so many hundreds of rare and interesting trees and plants in the wonder gardens that it would take a good-sized library just to enumerate them. Among the rarest, which has never before been grown in this country, is the Cedrela odorata from Brazil, which loses all its leaves in the winter and looks like a telegraph pole. These trees are used mainly for making lead pencils.

The mango was never grown here until Mr. Hart planted it.

THE ONLY BANYAN TREE.

The Sapindus sapona of Venezuela is another one of his exclusives. The natives of Venezuela use the berries of this tree for soap.

He also has the only banyan tree in this country. It belongs to the rubber family, of which Mr. Hart has thirty-eight varieties. The banyan is a native of India and grows to enormous size. When it gets to a certain stage of growth roots drop from the branches, and reaching to the earth, start another tree which does the same trick over again, ad infinitum, until an impenetrable jungle is formed.

Another of his exclusives is the litchi tree from China, which grows those funny little nuts found usually in Chinese stores.

A species of the Gesneria, with large, showy red flowers, and a native of Venezuela, which has never before been grown out of doors in the United States, is luxuriating on the side of a wooded canyon. The reason it has never before been grown outdoors here is probably that no one ever before tried it.

Every plant in this rare garden of mystery has had a diary since the day it first, as a seed, nestled into the ground. When a flower, shrub, tree or what-not is planted out in some nook or cranny an entry shows the location, the date and name on a big chart. Everything in the garden but the weeds is marked on this chart, and after having been charted is registered in the catalogue—and the diary starts. In this way Mr. Hart can keep track of the thousands upon thousands of trees and flowers and watch their "moral and spiritual" as well as their physical development.

TEMPERAMENT OF FLOWERS.

For he is a stanch believer in the theory advanced a short while ago by Prof. Henry G. Walter, head of the Plant Research Institute of Langhorne, that roses fall in love, and moreover, know no morals. The professor said "that if man loved as violently and recklessly as the roses the divorce courts would be running overtime."

And Mr. Hart doesn't think that roses are the only sinners by a good deal.

But he is also a firm believer in the theory that flowers and trees have "souls."

"Some flowers have very loving dispositions," he said, as he separated two creepers that had entwined themselves about each other. "Others have mean dispositions, and show extreme antipathy for other plants. Some are selfish and some are generous.

"I am firmly convinced from my close association with flowers and trees for many years that not only do they talk to each other, but some day some bright man will discover their language and method of communication."

Contrasts in Month of Flowers.

Kid's fete de luxe.

Miss Helen McCreery, the May queen in Hazard playground festival, and Old Man Winter himself and some of his cohorts.

JAPANESE PARADISE.

When he wanted to develop his Japanese water gardens he followed the same thorough methods that he has employed in every other part of his wonder land.

He hired a number of Japanese specialists, told them what he wanted, and left them to their own devices.

The Japanese drew sketches of the water gardens, and then went into the mountains to hunt for rocks with which to mold the artistic effects. They didn't just pick up rocks "hit or miss." They selected each for a particular place in the water garden, marking it with a number.

Then they hauled the stones down from the mountain in a wooden sleigh, and fitted the numbers together just as they belonged. And when they had finished, they had neither one rock too many nor one too few.

Spineless cactus is the biggest hoax that was ever foisted on an innocent public, according to Mr. Hart. "There is no such thing as a spineless cactus," he says. "The spines are there, though you may not see them. But if you handle the plant you will find the spines will stick your hands, poisoning them and causing nasty sores.

"You can imagine what it will do to the mucous membrane and intestines of cattle if it is fed them," he continued. "I couldn't find any animals that would eat it, although I tried it on horses, cows, sheep and hogs."

Yet he does not pretend to be a specialist in cacti, as he has only 257 species. If the cattle won't eat the spineless cactus, he yet finds a use for some of the species which he says bear very delicious fruit.

FOOD AND DRINK.

One can get everything from soup to nuts in the wonder garden.

If thirsty you don't have to hunt for a hydrant or a bucket. Just go to the traveler's tree and you will find in each of the cup-shaped leaves a cooling draught of water. This tree comes from Madagascar.

Should you not be satisfied with Adam's ale, however, you will find growing alongside the traveler's tree a coffee tree, a cocoa tree and a tea tree. Just help yourself.

When it get dark you can go to the candle-nut tree and secure the same kind of illumination to which the Chinese are accustomed. In the nuts of this tree is an oil which makes a light by which you might even be able to run your "jitney."

Mr. Hart doesn't grow his tomatoes on vines like ordinary, everyday folks. He grows his tomatoes on great big trees, and they're some tomatoes, too! He grows his melons the same way.

INDEPENDENCE.

With his own electric light plant, his own gas plant, his own fire department, his own carpenter shops, his own blacksmith shops, his own water system and many other things all his own, he is quite independent of the outside world.

If he needed it, no doubt he would put in his own police department, but that would be useless as the only grafters on his place are the gardeners—and they graft trees.

As yet the gardens have no name but the title of wonderful, bestowed by the government. Some day, Mr. Hart thinks, he will have a contest and the public may help decide what this paradise shall be called.

What its future will be he does not know. During his life he will retain possession, he says, but the day may come when the collection will possess a scientific value so great that it would be sheer selfishness for one family to retain it.

Children's May Fete.

anthem had ceased to re-echo from the surrounding hills, a flute note wooed the ear, and the veritable "Pied Piper of Hamlin" invaded the playground, followed, as of old, by enough children to start another Children's Crusade. There were little children and big children, boys and then again boys, and girls, all kissable, tricked forth in costumes out of the very realm of imagination itself.

Then, almost as unexpectedly as the flute note had followed the blare of the band, the parade resolved itself into component parts, and out of its midst burst forth a combat between Winter and Summer. Even Old Man Winter, himself, was there in frosty majesty and a polar bear, and a snowman, and all the other accessories of the season, when chilblains bite and tempers get short.

For a moment Winter held the stage alone. But then entered a shrinking spring flower, a hepatica. It was promptly gobbled up by Old Man Winter, with facial evidence of delight, but others came, all kinds of flowers, crocuses and hyacinths and narcissuses and tulips, and then such a pelting of blossoms as the Borean King and his host got soon drove them, discomfited, from the field.

May time now being in undisputed possession of the earth, her attendants immediately crowned her queen, and the frolic was on. The queen was little Miss Helen McCreery. As for the host of Winter, it was made up of boys, while the cohorts of Spring were girls.

MANY MAYPOLES.

Events moved rapidly thereafter through a programme of dances and chariot races and athletic events to the finale, a monster Maypole dance in which 600 girls participated about forty poles. It was as pretty an event as even the imagination could conjure up, the girls in their sheer white dresses, winding and rewinding the ribbons about the Maypoles, and executing intricate evolutions that, as one gazed, seemed to melt insensibly together into one billowing ocean of white.

Another pretty event was the dancing of a Hungarian "Czehbogar" by 200 girls, and the Highland fling by an equal number in costume. There was also a ribbon dance, a butterfly dance, this last in costume, and a circle schottische.

For the boys there was a sunflower race and various running and other athletics events, also a chariot race for them, as well as for the girls. The chariots were real, but were so decorated with flowers that they looked like segments of a garden that had, somehow, taken to wheels.

Altogether, the affair, besides being the biggest of its kind ever staged here, was crammed full of beauty. It was also a worthy preface to the series of events that are to consecrate June to the children, and that will include a children's pageant, "The March of Empire," at the Stadium the first week of June, a parade of floats designed by pupils of the public schools, and another of entries from the county schools, and a baby parade and juvenile exposition under the auspices of the Board of Education and the Los Angeles Million Club. The two last organizations are also arranging a dancing pageant as an adjunct, that will be given under the direction of Ruth St. Denis, the famous dancer.

REVIVE ROMANCE OF ROBIN HOOD.

NATURAL GROVE IS STAGE FOR STUDENT ACTRESSES.

Old English Heroes and Fairy Chorus Grace Greensward for Entertainment of Four Hundred Friends—Tennyson's Lines Read in Woodland Setting True to Them.

Using the natural beauty of the grove on the school grounds as stage setting, the girls of the Huntington Hall School, at Oneonta Park, enacted Tennyson's "Foresters" yesterday afternoon before an audience of 400 guests. The play, given in connection with the commencement exercises now starting, was a distinct success.

Working under the direction of Miss Hillery Mosley, instructor of expression at the school, the embroyo actresses rehearsed this beautiful description of Robin Hood for weeks before yesterday's production. And when the story unfolded in the grove, it was seen the work had not been wasted.

Miss Ruth Rathburn, as Robin Hood, Miss Dorothy Bennet as Maid Marian, and Miss Helen Bradbury as Frair Tuck, carried off the stellar roles with credit.

The tall trees and green undergrowth created the atmosphere of the times of Richard of the Lion Heart.

In the absence of a curtain, the actresses made their exits and entrances thorugh an opening between two great rose bushes.

Following is the cast of characters: Robin Hood, Miss Ruth Rathburn; Richard Coeur de Lion, Louise Jesson; Prince John, Emily Cass; Sheriff of Nottingham, Dorothy Polson; Little John, Dorothy Tuthill; Will Scarlet, Gertrude Fuller; Friar Tuck, Helen Bradbury; Mutch, the Miller, Mary Dahl; Abbott of St. Mary's, Katherine Lloyd; Justice, Alice Pfeiffer; Sir Richard Lee, Melbin Scheu; Walter Lee, Cornelia Beaumont; Maid Marian, Dorothy Bennet; Kate, Sabra Beaumont; Witch, Lillian Jeson; Queen of the Fairies, Katherine Housel.

Seven girls comprised the fairy ballet that danced in the woodland.

The commencement exercises will continue during the coming two weeks, until the school closes.

MANY TO ATTEND CELEBRATION.

MARKS RAILROAD'S COMPLETION - ARIZONA MINE'S FIRST ORE SHIPMENT.

No little ceremony will mark the completion of the Mascot and Western Railroad, now being built from Willcox to Mascot, Ariz. The completion of the construction will be signalized by the driving of the last, a copper spike, on June 15, and the first carload of ore will then also start from the Mascot Copper Company for the smelter. The ceremonies just referred to will consequently also mark the entrance of this concern into the ranks of producing companies.

State and public officers of Arizona will be present and a brass band of twenty-eight pieces will furnish the music. A special train of about twelve cars will come from San Francisco to the scene of the celebration. It will be filled with Pacific Coast shareholders of the Mascot Copper Company and the total personal wealth represented on the train will be about $100,000,000.

Special Pullman cars will come from St. Louis, Chicago and Detroit, filled with eastern shareholders, some of them being among the leading bankers and financiers of those cities.

The president, vice-president and general manager of the Southern Pacific have accepted invitations to be present, as well as a number of other important executive officers of this road, and of the El Paso and Southwestern, besides prominent copper mining operators of Arizona.

The Mascot Copper Company is headed by T. N. McCauley of San Francisco.

"CRANFORD TEA" PARTY.

Women of First Congregational Church Announce Unique Entertainment for Thursday.

Ante-bellum costumes, antique furniture, pictures, bric-a-brac, old silver and china, and cookies and tarts such as "grandma used to make" will be features of the "Cranford Tea," to be given by the Woman's Work Society of the First Congregational Church, Thursday afternoon and evening in the church parlors.

Characters in Mrs. Gaskel's story, "Cranford," will be represented by various persons.

The hostesses will be Mrs. J. C. F. Atsatt, Mrs. Seeley Mudd, Mrs. Pearl Strong, Mrs. Benton O. Johnson, Mrs. F. Ackerman, Mrs. A. E. Wheeler, Mrs. J. F. Newberry, Mrs. C. M. Daniels and Mrs. Dwight Satterlee.

Mrs. A. L. Cavanagh, Mrs. H. K. Adams and Mrs. Charles Richards have charge of a programme of reading and music and of a stage scene, illustrating the story.

Miss Lucia Railsback, soprano; Mrs. C. E. Fisher, contralto; Mr. Sumner, tenor, and Arthur Powell, baritone, will sing. Miss Grace Nash will preside at the piano.

Tickets on sale at Birkel's Music Store.

JONES WORTH WHILE.

Every fellow who gets a chance to hear the Rev. Carter Helm Jones, president of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, should take advantage of the opportunity. The American pulpit has few orators so delightful as Dr. Jones.

CIVILIZATION SOARS.

"Europe is recreated: And from the ashes of the old, decrepit, feudal carcass Civilization on her luminous wings soars, Phoenix-like, to Jove," says the poet.

Sure! Scattering stink pots, and dropping bombs on women and children as she soars!

CONTRABAND WOODEN LEGS.

All of the combatants in Europe thus far seem disposed to pay about as much attention to principles of international law or the obligations of treaties as a grizzly bear in pursuit of honey would pay to a sign over an aviary of "Tresspassers Not Permitted," or an Apache Indian on a raid would be governed by the rules of warfare announced by Grotius and Vattel and Wharton.

Are artificial legs contraband of war? New York manufacturers of artificial limbs are anxious to have this question answered before they fill large orders they have received from Europe.

INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Uncle Sam is working valiantly to save the poor remnant of what was once known as international law. A herculean task confronts him with all the so-called first-class nations of the world ranged on the side of international anarchy. But in a good cause Uncle Sam is persistent and persevering. At the present time the would-be world-beaters are anxious to push the tottering cripple, that sorely-stricken international law, out of the way of their war chariots, and so they resent the warning hand of Uncle Sam. Some day a lot of exhausted contestants will be hunting for the mangled remains of this same international law and will beg their good friend Uncle Sam to set his broken limbs. Then we shall see what we shall see.

TRIBUTE TO TURKS.

Courage is a well-scattered quality; it does not belong to one race more than another. The "unspeakable Turk" is just as heroic as the national of any Christian country. On the Gallipoli peninsula the Turks have won a tribute for bravery as well deserved as any in the war. After the great guns of the allied fleet had shelled a hillside till it was a seething volcano of smoke and fire, the allied forces advanced confidently to capture the supposedly-deserted trenches.

But the Turks were still there; and not only were they still there but under such disheartening conditions they repelled the attacks of the allies. This, coming from British official sources, ought to refute the statement that the Turk is the sick man of Europe. He is now only one of the many sick men of Europe who will be sicker yet before this reign of blood and fire is over.

WHERE IS THE BRITISH NAVY?

"Where is the British navy?" Americans are asking. Not that John Bull is expected to stick his nose into Helgoland; not that he can be expected to sweep the seas of every floating mine or every submarine torpedo boat; but where are all those hundreds of British war craft upon which so long has been based the boast of supremacy of the seas.

The sinking of the Lusitania has shown the weakness of Great Britain's navy in a way that has made America shudder. On trips, previous to her last, it had been understood the Lusitania was convoyed by swift cruisers or destroyers, and yet on this last trip she was allowed to sail unwatched and unaccompanied through the most perilous waters of all those which Germany has declared to be invested with under-the-sea craft.

Germany for weeks has kept up an attempt to maintain what it chooses to call a submarine blockade against all commerce of the British Isles, and its success grows daily. One hour comes the report of a trawler destroyed in the North Sea, and soon we hear of some similar feat off the Irish coast. In many cases the German submarines have gone so close to shore that their victims have had comparatively easy oar-pulling trips to land. Confidential advices to this country indicate that Germany actually is maintaining one or more submarine bases in British waters. Where can the English navy be? But few war vessels are on this side of the Atlantic; none seem needed in Pacific or Indian Ocean waters since German commerce raiders are no longer at large, and the Dardanelles campaign should not so weaken the navy as to make perilous life in and around the British Isles. Such feats as the sinking of the Lusitania, while they profit Germany nothing from a military viewpoint, cannot fail to give courage to the German naval heads. England must awaken if it is to command respect of America and the world for its navy. It can at least, if it hopes to maintain travel and shipping with American ports, give the appearance of providing warships to protect the interests which are intrusted to its care.

It is now claimed that Rome had labor unions in the time of St. Paul. Wonder who was doing the Sam Gompers act at that early stage of our existence?

WHAT CAUSED THE SHRINKAGE?

President Wilson was probably honest enough himself, but was grossly misinformed when he stated that the falling off of $10,000,000 per month on the revenue from customs duties was due, in chief part, not to the reductions made by the new tariff, but to the great decrease in importations attributable to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area in Europe affected by the war.

A scrutiny of statistics recently published by the Treasury Department shows that the shrinkage in customs revenues began as soon as the new tariff law went into operation and continued for months before the war in Europe was thought of. The chasm between government revenues and expenditures was made deeper and wider by extravagant appropriations of the late Congress for the ordinary expenditures of government, and was increased but not originated by the European war.

"It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us." The deficiency is steadily growing and must ultimately be provided for. To meet it by the issue of national bonds would be retrogressive finance and bad statesmanship. A merchant who should seek to repair his unwise management and extravagant living expenditures by borrowing would have started on the road to bankruptcy, and a nation, however wealthy, is no more exempt than an individual from the consequences of mismanagement and extravagance.

When there was $75,000,000 of treasury funds on deposit with the national banks throughout the country some hand-to-mouth Democratic statesmen at Washington proposed to call in this treasury balance to meet present needs. Happily, wiser counsels prevailed and it was not done. If it had been done it would have produced financial distress and confusion, and might even have resulted in panic at the money centers that would have been followed by bankruptcy and sheriffs' sales. Money is the life blood of commerce. Impede the circulation and atrophy will result.

The cessation of importations from the countries at war and from countries not at war which depend upon German, French, Russian, Austrian, British—and now Italian—vessels for transportation has temporarily had a protective effect upon American manufacturers. But it is only temporary. A restoration of peace would set the looms and furnaces of Europe again at work and give employment to hundreds of thousands of workers who would receive half to two-thirds the wages paid to American laborers. Our manufacturers, whose establishments were closed or reduced to half-production by the Democratic tariff, will not take the risk of making goods, the value of which might be at any time reduced by a sudden restoration of normal conditions in Europe. There is nothing to warrant an abandonment of the purpose of Republicans and patriotic Progressives throughout the country to elect next year a majority of Republican representatives who will amend the odious and absurd free-trade law and restore the protective tariff under which the country grew and prospered for many years.

MAY TWENTY-FOURTH.

About ten years ago, May 24, Queen Victoria's birthday, was dedicated as Empire Day for Great Britain. A local British organization has now announced that it will hold on that date a mass meeting which, judging from previous affairs under the auspices of this association, will be largely a demonstration in favor of the allies.

The United States has always looked leniently and tolerantly upon these national days and their celebration in this country—the Irishman and his St. Patrick's Day and the like—but there is no denying that they foster the hyphenated American idea. And for that reason, in this particular crisis, we cannot but feel that they should not be encouraged.

We take no special objection to the meeting in question, especially as it is announced as for the purpose of promoting friendship between this country and Great Britain, upholding the ideals of democracy, justice, liberty and the sacredness of treaties, etc.

But at this time, when national feeling runs high and the position is peculiarly delicate for this country, we think that the best interests of everybody concerned will be better served by a generous measure of silence, or the maxim that least said soonest mended.

Maybe we are presupposing a state of affairs that is not contemplated, but the fact remains that at each of the previous meetings like this under consideration the enemies of England came in for some very stringent criticism, of which doubtless Britishers approve, but which is, after all, but pouring oil on the flames.

When the war is over there will be urgent need of reconciliation and forgiveness on all sides. As in private quarrels, the less bitterness that has been engendered by words the better, for physical hurts are more readily forgotten, as any schoolboy will vouch.

Patriotism is a fine thing, let none decry; but there is a time and a place when outward expression is inadvisable, when the individual patriotism of the spirit is a greater thing. We hope that our British citizens and their sympathizers will bear this in mind and make of their mass meeting more an expression of loyalty to this country of their adoption than an occasion for the reiteration of bitterness, the fostering of hatred, the desire for revenge.

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP.

Bishop Johnson of Los Angeles in his opening address before the Episcopal convention put his finger on a tender spot in church progress that needs healing if Christian ideals are ever to regenerate mankind. He made a strong plea for more spirituality, not so much among the clergy, where it is plentiful, as among the lay helpers, where it is not so evident. The contention that Christianity is a failure because it only exists today through its secular and social features is an old one and lately has been widely discussed in public.

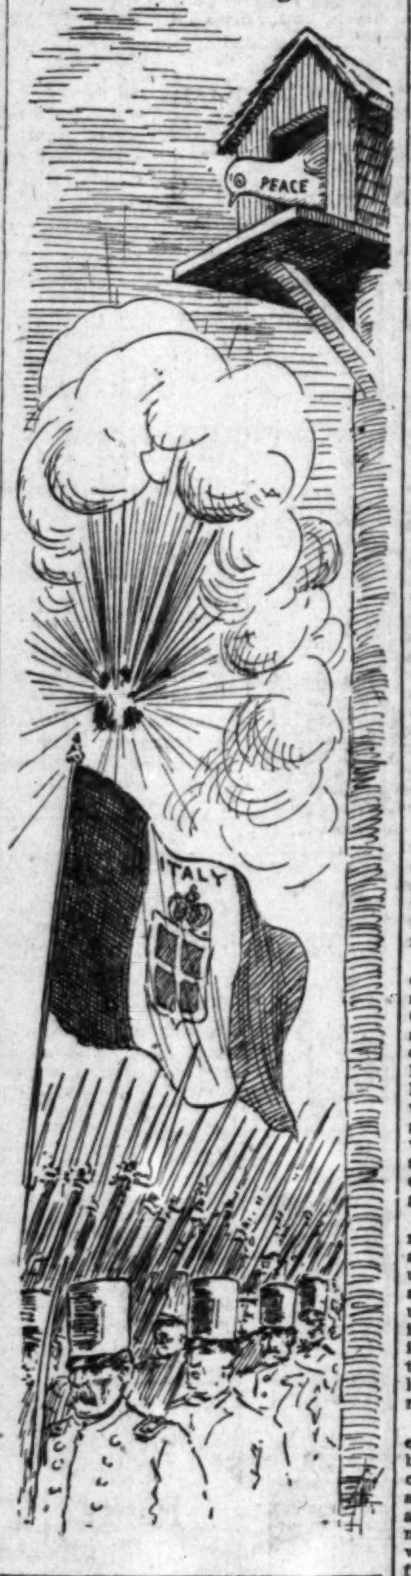
As soon as a majority believe the church is primarily a business institution its capacity for doing good has passed away. While recognizing the need of strong financial brains in every church management, since without proper financing a church is hopelessly handicapped, the bishop urged his hearers always to make the religious side of the church paramount, never to let the spiritual become secondary to the material. The laborer is worthy of his hire. Yet in every enterprise the man who works only for his hire will never be anything more than a hired worker. This is true of secular occupations. It is true of those who strive to serve the Master.

A wise merchant who has good goods advertises them, but he remembers the goods must be good or the advertisement in time will shame him. A Christian organizer must not place parish teas and socials, bazaars and club meetings, the amusement of congregations or the arousing of emotion simply with an eye to the collection plate as the one and only requisite in successful church work. It is good sometimes for authority to raise a voice for the higher side.

Bishop Johnson has always been one of the most zealous Christian workers for the higher ideals in church life. Never was a reminder of these ideals for all Christian workers more timely than in this present year. We are seeing in Europe the effects of unrestrained materialism in national politics; we need warning lest materialism get a stranglehold on the religious life of the nations.

The church must use the legitimate weapons of business to keep it as an institution financially capable of doing good. All institutions must have two sides. On the outside it must possess the things that please, that quicken, that attract; but the inside of the cup must always be the soul.

More Discouragement.



THE POET'S POWER.

Gabriele d'Annunzio, Italy's national poet, has proved once more the poet's power over the hearts of men and even the destinies of nations. The ovation he received in the Italian Chamber of Deputies at the first meeting of the War Ministry surpassed that given to Premier Salandra himself. For months D'Annunzio has been crying war into the ears of Italy, and Italy has become intoxicated with the music. No one can doubt that the inspired utterances of the war poet have gone far to stir the embers into a blaze and so drive Italy from her strict attitude of neutrality.

But poets like D'Annunzio, perhaps luckily for the world, are few and far between. Perhaps, too, it is well that the lesser poets, whose "songs gush from their hearts" but do not "echo down the corridors of time," are always in a large majority. How much D'Annunzio has deserved of his people time alone will tell. Longfellow, in our peaceful hours, may have done more for the good of America with "The Village Blacksmith" than D'Annunzio with his martial fire has in the present crisis done for the glory of Italy.

The suggestion is made that President Wilson ought to stump the country in the interest of his certain candidacy before the people. What is needed to boost the Wilson candidacy more than anything else is a return of confidence and prosperity. It is a condition and not a theory that is confronting the Democratic party.

Mayor Whealton says the palmist of Long Beach should be regulated. Everybody down there seems engaged in the task of trying to hand something to the other fellow. He ought to be regulated, all right.

AFTER THE WAR.

BY THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

This colossal war—the blunder and the crime of all the centuries—will come to an end: it cannot last forever.

When it is ended, with the combatants exhausted, and with perhaps not a single one of the contending nations victorious in any high or permanent sense, nor with its territory safely expanded, this journal will continue its campaign, begun now, along these lines, substantially, and along other lines in harmony therewith.

I. Advocacy of the restoration of the status quo ante-bellum—the application to the situation, as it may be found at the end of the fighting, of the principle of making no alteration or disturbance in the national sovereignty or the territorial integrity of any of the contending nations. No seizure and appropriation by the victor of the territory, lands or property of the vanquished.

II. Each nation to bind up its own wounds—measureless and poignant though they be—and pay its own costs of the dreadful and needless conflict.

III. Peace on the basis of all sides quitting the fight simultaneously, under a common agreement, and without prejudice to the other side or sides; and with the further agreement that fighting between nations shall end forever. An international compact, embracing every one of the recent combatants, as well as all other nations that can be persuaded to join the pact upon even and honorable terms; the same to speedily become a Universal Peace Pact, embracing all civilized nations and civilized peoples throughout the earth, banding themselves together for the high purpose of ending wars forever.

IV. Such a Peace Pact would require for its logical creation powerful organization, enduring establishment and continued life as the controlling, disseminating power which the world sadly needs today—more than ever in all its history—these fundamental prerequisites, to wit:

(1.) A World Government composed of the essential elements, viz: A World Congress, a World Judiciary and a World Arbitral Court; a World Executive Department, with an official head recognized by all branches of the World Government, as well as by the Powers composing the Universal Peace Pact; such Executive Head to be duly invested with all the executive authority legally appertaining to his high position, and which may be delegated to his hands by the several nations composing the World Government, acting through the World Congress duly created by them.

(2.) It will then be for each of the battling nations, save poor, prostrate Belgium, to address itself to the sorry task of binding up its own wounds, numberless, deep, sore and grievous as they are, of burying its own uncounted dead, and of providing in time—in no short time, either—for the payment of its own proper share of the mighty cost of the losing war; for whoever wins, all will lose, in the true and large sense, in the long run.

(3.) A World Army and a World Navy, to obey and serve the World Government and be ever its strong right arm against all comers (should any come.) The men, arms, munitions, ships, guns and other paraphernalia for such dynamic world force may be drawn by mutual consent (which would be given, almost without question) from the several nations composing the Universal Alliance or Universal Peace Pact, in proportion to the military, naval, population, financial and commercial strength of each.

(4.) Complete disarmament is not possible in this day and generation; and none but unwise observers, inaccurate students of history, and narrow, murky thinkers hold that it is possible; therefore,

(5.) In raising and organizing this mighty dynamic force for the high object of guaranteeing, beyond the question of a doubt, the permanent peace of the world, it would be wholly unnecessary to resort to the disarmament of the several nations, or any of them. Each might safely retain in its exclusive service, for internal defense and the suppression of domestic rebellion, insurrection or invasion, such necessary portions of its regular military and naval forces as its national government might see fit, in its own independent discretion, to retain. It would clearly not be the policy of the World Government to denude, or attempt to denude, of soldiers, sailors, warships or guns any of the nations forming a component part of the superior government; on the contrary, each separate nation might safely and wisely be left to its own choice in that regard, for every country upon earth requires the means of domestic defense within its own undisputed control. Disarmament to the limit of internal safety would come in good time through the free and willing action of the respective countries themselves which would not commit the economic folly of keeping up large standing armies when no longer required to make war upon neighboring countries. Moreover, the World Government, with its powerful armament, would stand in no danger whatever of assaulting any single nation, even should such nation ever become hostile and "buck the traces." And yet even the combined army and navy of the World Government would not need to be so tremendously powerful after all; it could dominate the whole world if in its ranks were embraced contingents of only modest strength drawn from each of the leading countries that would almost certainly enter the Pact and do their part in the blessed work of securing and forever maintaining peace over this sin-cursed earth.

(6.) International control of the sea and of the air, and the regulation of the navigation thereof; so that the tremendous abuses, unwarranted hardships and needless dangers which the existing conflict has developed may forever be brought to an end, and the clear rights of neutral non-combatants and peaceful commerce on the seas shall be amply protected henceforth.

(7.) One of the very foremost and firmest features of this Plan of Universal Peace is the provision that the Universal Peace Pact—the World Government—shall never invade, but always preserve, maintain, defend and guarantee the territorial integrity, the national autonomy, the independent sovereignty, and the peace of every member of the Alliance; in brief, that this all-embracing World Government shall secure to every nation within the protecting folds of the Alliance a measure of security impossible for it to attain by its own unaided efforts. So that no country, however powerful or pretentious, need hesitate to enter the Pact because of fear that it would thereby lose any of its rights, dignities, immunities or prerogatives as an independent member of the great Family of Nations. Only in the impossible event that such nation should inadvertently, unwarrantably, needlessly run against the all-powerful World Government would there be any difficulty between the lesser and the greater power. And then the trouble would be speedily ended. . . . Universal peace, universal protection, unquestionable security, coupled with measureless and widespread blessings, would ensue throughout the world.

V. Stress may well be laid upon these provisions of the Peace Plan, among others, viz: (1) That feature which provides for a World Supreme Court, whose high, just and noble mission it will be to hear and arbitrate, in a tribunal the foremost known to men, all questions of difference arising between the members of the Alliance, thus making an overruling Court of Justice take the place of the dread arbitrament of the sword; (2) that feature which guarantees to every nation-member of the Pact its territorial integrity, its independent national autonomy, and its perfect freedom from every objectionable or extraneous interference or influence, even by the World Government itself; (3) that feature which guarantees to every nation concerned the continued, uninterrupted control of its own military and naval establishment for internal purposes, subject only to the superior calls of the World Government upon each member of the Pact to supply its due quota of men, military stores and equipments from time to time, (4) that feature which guarantees to each nation entering the Pact, no matter at what stage, complete equality with every other member, including the original organizers, in the essential matters of rights, privileges, immunities and prerogatives; and (5) that feature which provides that the Peace Pact shall become a living entity—a practical reality as a world force—when a sufficient number of leading nations (five or seven of the foremost) shall have entered its ranks, subscribed to its constitution and laws, and pledged themselves to its purposes. Such action, when taken—and it may yet be taken—will give birth, life, power and action to the World Government and PEACE TO THE WORLD.

VI. The foregoing are only some of the essential features of the elaborate, world-wide "Plan for Ending Wars" to which I commenced to give original and studious personal attention long before the outbreak of the existing mighty conflict in Europe. The subject will be pursued, in order to present the plan in its entirety, step by step.

HARRISON GRAY OTIS.

The Tejon Ranchos, May 18, 1915.

THE HONEST MAN'S CREED.

I believe all useful work is honorable and that idleness, or an attempt to live on the labors of others without giving an equivalent, is a disgrace.

In every business transaction I will endeavor to give a fair return for what I get, and aim to make all my contracts in such a way that the two parties concerned could exchange places with no injustice to either of us.

When I work for others I will deal honestly in the use of their material and machinery, and when others work for me, I will deal honestly concerning their wages and welfare.

I believe no person has any right to live in this world without making an honest effort to earn a living and to produce and put into the world as much as he or she consumes in personal comforts and expenses.

I will undertake to restrict myself to such occupations as are plainly helpful and not harmful to humanity.

I will not take for myself any privilege or license in morals and habits that I am not willing to grant to all others—men and women alike—without distinction of wealth or station in life.

I will not give myself permission to indulge in any amusements or pastimes that are morally unsafe for the average inexperienced young persons who must accept their amusements under such conditions and in such places as the public affords.

Inasmuch as children learn and do what they see older persons doing, I will undertake to live in such a way that the childhood of the world can safely follow my example and teaching.

Trees Record the Weather.

[Scientific American:] In cutting up logs for experimental purposes at the Madison (Wis.) laboratory of the United States Forest Service is was noticed that in a number of them there were little diagonal streaks, or wrinkles, running across the grain, and that these appeared entirely on the same side of the trees.

It was well known that these wrinkles indicated compression failures, such as result from too great a strain on the fiber at some time, either from bending in a storm, or from rough handling; but as all of the logs in question came from the same locality in Florida, and the markings were all on the north side of the log, it was assumed that they were caused by some severe storm from the south that had swept over that part of the country.

By carefully counting the annual rings of wood, and knowing when these trees were cut, it was decided that the storm recorded by the wrinkles must have occurred in the year 1898; and inquiries verified the fact that at that time a hurricane had swept over that region.

Another Big Sun Spot.

[Scientific American:] A great sun spot, estimated to be 100,000 miles long, has been disclosed by the recent development of a photographic plate that was exposed at the naval observatory at Washington on March 29. The following instructions are given by the observatory officials for observing the spot:

"By holding a piece of smoked glass in front of one of the object glasses of an ordinary opera glass, with the smoked side turned toward the opera glass and looking through this side only, using one eye, the spot may be plainly seen. Caution should be observed not to get the full glare of the sun in the eye, and the side of the glasses not in use should be turned away from, instead of toward, the other eye, so as to avoid the possibility of the sun's rays striking that eye through the glass."

The Story of Stomachache.

[The Lancet:] Segmentary neurosis is the predisposing cause of disease belonging to the class of the paroxysmal spasmodic disorders associated with the musculature of the alimentary canal. In members of this class seizures occur in connection with food-taking and gastro-oesophageal hypertonus; they also occur from mental and emotional excitement and from muscular effort; in them both visceral and parietal layers of muscle are engaged in spasm. Consequently they resemble the anginal seizure in other features besides that of predisposing cause. A neurosis attended by intercostal hyperalgesia ensues when dendritic fibers belonging to the affected center traverse pressure zones of hyperplasias, aneurysms, new growths, and pericardial and pleuritic adhesions. Hence these diseases, as well as gastric disorders, may be regarded as potential remote causes of anginal pains and seizures.

BOARD OF WORKS MAKES APPEAL FOR EQUITY.

City Improvements and Public Work Taken Over by Municipality in San Fernando and Palms Creates New Situation for Which Early Action is Requested.

The Board of Public Works yesterday laid the foundation for the establishment of local boards of improvements in the newly-annexed territory of San Fernando Valley and the Palms, and also for the equitable apportionment of taxes paid by the property holders in those districts.

In calling upon the Council and the Board of Supervisors to take notice of the pre-annexation promises, the works board passed a resolution introduced by Commissioner Osborne.

The annexation of the San Fernando and Palms districts brought under the direction of the municipal government an extensive system of roads, streets, bridges, lights and other public works and these necessarily come within the responsibility of the Board of Public Works.

Both annexed districts have paid into the county treasury their allotment of taxes for 1915 and are now being assessed and will pay into the county treasury the taxes for 1916.

The board contends that the money so paid and that assessed in both districts should be applied to that territory. The Board of Public Works has been called upon to take over the public work in both districts and has no funds with which to extend that supervision.

The board's resolution "calls the attention of the Council and the Board of Supervisors to this important phase of the recent annexation, with the request that these two legislative and governing bodies of the city and county confer with each other and enter into an equitable arrangement whereby the funds raised by taxes upon the property within the annexed territory for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, may be applied to the public works and other municipal purposes of said territory."

ELEY CONFIRMED.

NEW TERM FOR CHIEF.

The reappointment of Chief Eley of the fire department, was approved by the Fire Commission yesterday when Mayor Rose notified that body of his decision.

Chief Eley notified the commission that he had sent out a warning through the department that any city employee who is found to be active politically and perniciously so, will either be removed or suspended from the department. Chief Eley calls attention to several complaints he has received, charging that firemen have spoken insultingly of various candidates.

The activity of firemen in urging the adoption of the two-platoon initiative ordinance, said the fire chief, does not come within the purview of pernicious political activity.

Additional fire apparatus will be installed at Gardena, following a request made of the commission by the Gardena Chamber of Commerce.

The commission once more urged the Budget Committee to include a fire boat for the harbor district in the distribution of funds. The chief called attention to the fact that one tug is now out of commission and the second tug, rented for relief duty, makes a shortage in case of a waterfront fire.

Want Transfers Restored.

Residents of the Canyon drive and Bronson avenue district have petitioned the Council for a restoration of the transfer service over Pacific Electric lines. The petitioners ask that the old custom of issuing transfers in both directions between the Brush Canyon and the Franklin-avenue lines, recently discontinued, be restored. The petitioners set forth that the district is served by a branch from the Franklin-avenue line through Brush Canyon and that the people are required to pay an extra fare from one line to the other.

Municipal Slag.

The Council made the city election of June, official yesterday by adopting an ordinance outlining precincts and naming election officials.

The Council yesterday referred to the Public Utilities Committee the application for a spur track made by the L. A. Railway. The site of the proposed track is near Fifth and Central.

The appeal on the improvement of Serrano avenue, between Fifth street and Wilshire boulevard, was set for May 29, in the Council.

The proposed abandonment of proceedings for the improvement of Beaudry avenue, from Fifth street to Wilshire boulevard, was yesterday referred to the committee of the whole.

The City Attorney, engineer and electrician have been instructed to prepare the necessary ordinance for lighting Oxford avenue, Serrano avenue, and Hobart boulevard, between Third and Fifth streets.

The Council yesterday denied a petition to halt proceedings for the paving of Santa Monica boulevard until the sidewalk width is determined.

The re-draft of the motion picture ordinance, devised by the Moving Pictures Censor Board, was referred yesterday to the Public Welfare Committee.

BANKRUPTCY CASES.

Stuart H. Ingram, a merchant at El Centro, filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday. His debts amount to $2014 and his assets to $472.69, he sets out.

Sterling Price Coffer, a clerk of this city, alleges that he owes $1622, in a similar petition, and he has only $45 to discharge the debt.

Joseph Greene, a merchant tailor of this city, owes $12,285.97, of which $3837.29 is unsecured, and his assets are valued at $11,126.30, according to the allegations of a petition filed yesterday.

NEW COUNTY FARM BOSS.

U.S.C. Graduate Who was Highest in Recent Examination Given Job as Superintendent.

William Ruddy Harriman was appointed superintendent of the Los Angeles County Farm yesterday by N. R. Martin, superintendent of County Charities. The appointment will be effective June 1. Mr. Harriman will succeed Carl P. Talle, who has been acting superintendent for several months. Mr. Talle succeeded C. C. Manning, who resigned in February, following a grand jury report criticising his management.

Mr. Harriman led the list of eighty-five applicants in the civil service examination held March 25. The new superintendent is 26 years of age and since he was graduated from the University of Southern California has been a soil expert. He has been quite active for several years in the fraternal and progressive life of the city. He lives with his wife at No. 4175 Central Terrace.

There are more than 400 inmates at the County Farm at present and forty-eight employees. The position pays $150 a month with board and residence.

Husband Testifies He has no More Affection for His Wife and Admits Her Charges—She Gets Decree and Custody of the Child and Also is Granted Alimony.

"You heard the testimony of the plaintiff and the witnesses?" Paul C. Whitice was asked by his attorney in the divorce suit of Mrs. Louise Whitice before Judge Taft yesterday.

"It's true," replied Mr. Whitice; "it was impossible to get along with her."

"What do you mean by that?" asked the court.

"I have no affection for her."

"What excuse have you for the treatment your wife complained of?" Mrs. Whitice testified that he humiliated and insulted her; told her vulgar stories in the presence of others and nagged her. Her brother-in-law told how Mr. Whitice tried to break his wife's will.

"None."

"Did you have any affection for your wife when you married her"

"It was a mistake—the marriage."

After eliciting the fact that Mr. Whitice is a building contractor and for several months had been living with his father and drawing an occasional plan, the court asked for the agreement Mr. Whitice drew up under which he was to pay his wife $35 a month for a definite time and arranged about seeing their daughter, Martha Belle, 2 years old.

"The decree will be granted Mrs. Whitice," said the court. "She will have the custory of the child with no limitations, and you will pay her $35 a month until the order is changed."

Mrs. Whitice collapsed as she left the court under the stress of the ordeal she had passed through. She was revived in an anteroom. The marriage was one more laid at the door of Santa Ana. It was the result of a two-weeks' acquaintance. The separation occurred last January.

BIG DAMAGES.

SOUGHT ON ARREST.

Miss Pauline Estelle Hall, who, through her attorneys, McDonald and Ong, asserted that she was made the victim of mistaken identity, filed suit for false arrest yesterday against a department store, asking $25,000 damages for the alleged wrongful act, and $25,000 injury to her good name and character.

The complaint alleges that Miss Hall was arrested on the 1st inst., by operates of a detective agency (Nick Harris) while she was standing in the street. She was taken to Central Police Station and put into jail. Violet Hall, her younger sister, is alleged to have told the operatives that they had the wrong person. It is further alleged that the defendants charged her with being the person "who bought the dress and forged a check." This is asserted to have been a false statement.

HARD JOB.

TWO PLACES AT ONCE.

When Paul Schenck was engaged as attorney in a hot case in the Police Court several months ago, he was defendant in a $10,000 damage suit brought by Fred E. Opitz in Judge Wilbur's court. Mr. Schenck could not solve the problem of being in two places at the same time, so the damage suit went to the jury in his absence. The jury found judgment against Mr. Schenck for $5000.

Yesterday Judge Wilbur granted a new trial, it being agreed that Mr. Schenck will pay $100 attorney's fees and that the testimony in the Mervin's trial shall be used in the new trial owing to the absence of certain witnesses. The suit grew out of injuries alleged to have been sustained by Mr. Opitz in a collision with Mr. Schenck's auto.

COURT PARAGRAPHS.

PROCEEDINGS IN BRIEF.

TAKES OFF WEIGHT. Judge Fred V. Wood, who tried the Sebastian case, has returned to Amador county to attend to his own court business. Like Judge John Hancock, who came here from the north, he returned lighter than when he came. The grind of the local courts took six pounds off Judge Wood and reduced Judge Hancock almost as much. Both agree that the Los Angeles courts are fine reducers of adipose tissue.

CONDEMNATION SUIT. A suit to condemn property for the widening of Fourteenth street, San Pedro, from Beacon street to Pacific avenue, was filed by the city yesterday against Charles Addison and 100 other property owners. The street is now sixty feet wide and it is proposed to widen it an additional ten feet.

QUIET TITLE SUIT. A suit to quiet title to twenty acres on Railroad avenue, Santa Monica, was filed yesterday by Mrs. Eliza V. Chaffee against the Title Insurance and Trust Company, administrator of the $7,000,000 estate of Arcadia B. de Baker. Mrs. Chaffee claims an interest in the property and the court will determine how much if any interest she has in it.

REDLIGHT SUIT. A suit under the Redlight Abatement Act was filed yesterday by Deputy District Attorney McCartney against Edward A. Gibbs, owner, and Margaret Valle, tenant, of the premises at No. 622½ North Main street. It is stated that the tenant has been arrested four times. The court is asked for a restraining order. In other suits filed and tried the court gave judgment for the people.

NOT HERS ALONE. James Craner deeded his wife property valued at $5000. When he learned that she was disposed to sell the property, he brought suit yesterday to have the court declare that she hold it in trust for his benefit. Mrs. Craner is named defendant.

Mother Love.

BECOMES THIEF FOR SICK CHILD.

WOMAN CAUGHT IN ACT, BUT IS SET FREE.

Her Little Boy, Ill in Denver with Pneumonia, Seamstress Tries Shoplifting with Poor Success—Kind Persons Contribute to Send Her to Boy's Bedside.

Convincing the judge that her only reason for stealing about $10 worth of buttons, beads and the like, from a department store, was to sell them for the purpose of raising money to send to her young son, who is lying at the point of death in Denver, Mrs. Carrie Anderson, a comely seamstress, was given a suspended sentence in the Police Court yesterday morning. An effort is being made by persons who heard of the woman's plight, to send her to the bedside of her child.

"I received a letter from Denver yesterday morning, telling me that my boy, Harry, 12 years old, is dying from an attack of pneumonia and asking me to either come to him or send him some money," the woman told the court. "I was working on two dresses which were to be delivered today, but I needed some buttons and beads for them and had no money with which to buy them. I had heard of women shoplifting with success and after worrying and crying in my room for several hours over my dilemma, I decided to go to a department store and take a chance.

"I knew it was wrong, but when I thought of my poor boy dying and in need of money, I felt that I could steal the little things I needed without hurting my conscience. I never committed a wrong deed before and while I know I am guilty, I hope there is some way out of this."

Mrs. Anderson also told the judge that her husband deserted her two years ago and since that time she has had a bitter struggle to keep herself and the child.

"Your case seems to be particularly sad," said the judge, "and under the circumstances I believe it an act of justice as well as mercy to give you freedom."

When told that an effort was to be made to raise enough money to purchase a ticket for Mrs. Anderson to Denver, the judge chipped in and in a short time half of the money was up.

STEALS CASH REGISTER.

With a brace and bit a burglar effected entrance to the store of the Howard Haines Company, No. 623 East Seventh street, early yesterday morning and got away with a cash register. There was no money in it, but the register is valued at about $100.

Reduced Rates Announced.

upon the volume of business done by the saloon.

Photographs of several checks are also supposed to be in existence, but each of them lacks the indorsement of the Whiffen Campaign Committee, as they were photographed before they reached that institution, and Manager Snowden asserts no check was accepted.

The political activity of the Knights of the Royal Arch, through the organization known as the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, is not to be confused with the Associated Liquor Industries, nor the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, neither of which is taking an active part in this campaign, according to their officers.

Secretary Merrill of the retailers' association explained last night that the body was formed last December to organize for the 1916 fight against State-wide prohibition. The present campaign is merely an incidental amusement, he said.

Over 100,000 Whiffen circulars are being rained from the sixth floor of the I. W. Hellman Building, where the association has its headquarters.

"We respectfully offer Mr. Whiffen," says the saloon circular. "We ask you to help Mr. Whiffen and ourselves to get by the present hard times and pay our bills."

The circular is not signed. Usually, the Royal Arch sends its literature with a huge X on the final page, but this time the X is missing.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CISCO, May 22.—While considering the most satisfactory way a week at the Panama-Pacific Exposition it is well to remem- one's mental attitude plays a great part in any sort of enjoy- there are things even in the exposition that may not meet if one's mood is not receptive to pleasure. One of the very important things to be considered, therefore, is one's state of after six months of intimate acquaintance with the fair, I might digestion and companions and—shoes. The latter are of the very importance, for you will get very tired walking about, and no riding on the little motor trains and electriquettes will give you efficacy as walking. But the exposition grounds comprise 635 acres buildings are huge and in themselves rather exhausting.

most beautiful approach to the exposition is by boat, either Golden Gate (the exposition lies within the channel) or crossing ferry. This gives a view of the bay cities and Marin hills, of and the fairyland exposition at once, and is a wonderful pic- ing from the center of the city, however, and determined to the grounds from a good vantage ground, I suggest the Fillmore stop at the top of this high point to change from electricity to the view is colorful and splendid.

WHAT TO DO FIRST.

great mistake to take one of the cars that will take you to the entrance at the Zone. The Zone is the least attractive part of the appearance goes, and one should never go there in a spirit of tion. The most attractive entrance, aside from the ferry slip, is the Tower of Jewels at Scott street.

thing to do is to go through that entrance and sit down in front the South Gardens and admire all that lies before you. The yellow bloom and in the center the tower rises 430 feet high, beauty dominating the whole scene. The buildings in this style of the French renaissance of which the Palace of Horti- the left is an elaborate example with its phalanx of caryatides its huge stucco bouquets, festoons, obelisks and classic fig- right is Festival Hall and the Press building, both of which are style of architecture. Then there is a sudden leap across the to Italian traditions. There are two minor courts both of designed by George W. Kelham, the chief of architecture, and the gay pigments of Alexandria, green, red, salmon pink and buff nestle together harmoniously. Botticelli cherubs in low relief festoon these courts, the Court of Palms and the Court of Flowers.

UNDER THE GREAT ARCH.

After you have admired all this beauty I advise you to walk though the great arch under the Tower of Jewels and in passing look closely at the murals by Dodge and the lovely Greuzelike children by Edith Woodman Burrows. You will now have entered the Court of the Universe which was designed by McKim, Mead and White of New York, and which is the central and largest of the courts.

From here you will walk through a great arch into the Court of Abundance, which was designed by Louis C. Mullgardt. This is the east central court of the exposition, and in design shows the oriental phase of the Spanish-Moorish type. Frank Brangwyn, the distinguished London mural artist, has contributed eight paintings to the walls at the end of every colonnade, which represent the Elements and the Seasons. This court is dedicated to music, dancing, acting and pageantry, and it is here that Gabriel Pares and his French band play every afternoon. Under the arch leading into the Court of the Universe are two very beautiful murals by Edward Simmons.

Passing through the Court of the Universe under the west arch, you will enter the Court of Four Seasons, designed by Henry Bacon of New York in Italian renaissance. Piccirilli has contributed four groups of statuary to this court, representing the Seasons, and Albert Jaegers, three groups representing "Harvest," "Rain" and "Sunshine."

The main exhibit palaces, eleven in number, surround these interior courts, but I should advise you to walk through the courts on to the Marina, which is the long avenue stretching the length of the grounds along the water front. From there, you can get a view of the north side of the exposition, and after all, on the first day, a general view of the grounds is what you want.

It would be a great mistake to attempt to look into any of the exhibit palaces, or even to make an approach to the foreign area, or the Zone, until you have got a fairly intimate view of the whole. Try on that first day to make the exposition your own, and to get into the mood of the whole artistic scheme.

GO AGAIN.

Another occasion should be taken to "do" the exhibit palaces, for they require time and fresh energy to do them any sort of justice, and remember that when you see a foreign exhibit in one of the palaces, it may be only one of a dozen which that nation has contributed to the exposition. For example, the Italian exhibit in the Palace of Education is of such a meager style and quantity that it draws uncomplimentary remarks from the observers; but when you remember that Italy has an exhibit in every one of the eleven exhibit palaces as well as a group of three buildings of her own in which are housed exhibits of her industries and products, you become increasingly amazed at her interest and generosity.

The exhibit palaces cannot be inspected in a day, nor can they be carefully observed in a month; but for a general survey, I should begin at the Palace of Mines and walk through to the left passing into the Palaces of Transportation, Manufactures and Varied Industries. Then, crossing the Court of the Universe, enter the Palaces of Liberal Arts, Education, Food Products and Agriculture. These are the eight main exhibit palaces, and a fair survey of them will take at least a day.

A DAY FOR CALIFORNIA.

The California Building deserves a day devoted to itself but in its vicinity are the buildings given by Oregon, New York, Indiana and Hawaii, which may be taken in in the same day, without an undue rush. Further on down toward the foreign area are the other State buildings at the end of which is the Massachusetts Building. These State buildings will require more than a day for even the most casual observation. In the foreign area there are some thirty buildings to be explored, and beyond that comes the live stock section, the race course, and the athletic field. This winds up the western end of the exhibition grounds.

AS TO THE ZONE.

As to the Zone, I heartily recommend you to go there on Saturday after-

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS AT PANAMA-PACIFIC FAIR.

"Best lot of fellows in the world—the traveling salesmen!"

That expresses, in a concise manner, the sentiment of everyone at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition after members of the United Commercial Travelers of America finished their seventeenth grand council at San Francisco May 8 and 9. The traveling men worked one day, and played the next. During the second day, the spirit of enthusiasm was so contagious that it swept the thousands of exposition visitors along with it.

The eight councils in the State of California sent 200 delegates to the grand council, which was convened in Festival Hall, a great structure built upon the grounds for assemblages. The major part of the first day's session was spent in selecting delegates to the supreme council, which meets in Columbus, O., the last week in June and represents a membership of 75,000 commercial travelers throughout the United States.

Luncheon was served on the "Joy Zone" to officers and delegates, and the Ladies' Committee entertained the visiting ladies with a lunch and a trip through the exposition grounds.

The afternoon session was held in the Ohio State pavilion, and the following officers elected:

Past grand counselor, W. P. Baker; grand counselor, B. F. Heastand; grand junior counselor, B. W. Lavelle; conductor, J. H. Brill; page, S. T. Breyer; sentinel, A. Peabody.

After the business meeting in the great Ohio Building, officers of the exposition joined in the entertainment of the visitors, who were escorted to the Court of the Universe, where addresses of welcome were delivered by officers of San Francisco and of the exposition. The visiting members were presented with a commemorative bronze medal, which had been cast to make historic observance of the great event.

During the afternoon, 200 delegates, each with a baggage check upon the lapel of his coat, descended upon the Joy Zone on bold adventure bent. Scouting in new territory, they annexed a variegated assortment of "lost baggage"—dusky maidens from Somaliland, tiny toyland tykes, Hawaiian hula-hula queens, coquettes from Cairo, Maori queens and alluring diving girls.

For two hours the party held high carnival. Samples of joy were distributed along the length of the Zone from end to end. Incidentally, each drummer bold found the "baggage" that the number of his check called for, and signed up a large order of merriment.

ENGAGE EXPERT.

H. J. Korkeji, a recognized expert in hog raising, and a graduate of the department of agriculture of the University of California, has taken charge of the Janss Investment Company's Hampshire hog ranch, at Conejo, Cal. The company has a herd of about 400 hogs on the property and plans to increase this number. In addition to his ranch work, Mr. Korkeji will be associated with that department of the Janss company handling alfalfa and farm lands for hog raising.

FAIRYLAND INTERIORS AT SAN DIEGO'S FAIR.

Japanese Art and Handiwork Exhibited in Pleasing Features from the Cherry Blossom Kingdom — Wonderful Vases and Carvings Shown in a Bewildering Array — Skillful Adaptation from All Nations.

BY MARY S. GULLIVER.

SAN DIEGO, May 22.—In our enthusiasm over the wonderful landscape gardening and the picturesque architecture of the San Diego exposition we sometimes forget the interior of the great buildings and the excellent exhibits there. But though the exposition is small and the directors did not strive to compete with former expositions in scope, as this is largely a California fair, the various buildings contain much of unusual interest and of educational value.

There are no exhibits made by the foreign governments, but there is a splendid exhibit of Japanese art and handiwork in the Foreign and Domestic Arts Building. The Japan Exhibit Association, a branch of the Kyosan-Kai Company, a powerful commercial organization which represents the leading manufacturers and art collectors of Japan, has placed the exhibit.

There are rare collections of Satsuma, Cloisonnes, tapestries and wonderfully-carved teakwood cabinets, screens and other antiques. It is a delight to see the rare works of art in the collections, but it is even more interesting to study the progress and cleverness of the Japanese in appropriating for themselves and perfecting the arts of other nations.

The exhibitors have not laid as much stress upon the ancient art as upon the modern Japanese work and the exhibit constantly tells this story of Japanese ingenuity in adopting and perfecting the arts and sciences of other nations. The commercial organization itself, which was formed purely to place exhibits of Japanese and Chinese works of art in expositions, is an example of their progressiveness.

CULTURED PEARLS.

There is a collection of cultured pearls and as interesting as the exquisite jewels seen there is the story of the cultured pearl which Mr. Shintaro Wada will tell you if you are interested. Not satisfied with the uncertain crop of pearl fishing in their natural state, in which two or three pearls are found in about 1000 oysters, the Japanese have a pearl culture process whereby they know the exact proportion of production for their market.

This pearl culture consists of the introduction of a small foreign substance into the oyster which forms a nucleus for the pearl. The oyster is then returned to the water and the natural secretions form the pearl. Out of 100 oysters so treated there are a possible six or seven pearls to be found. The only defect is that the cultured pearls have a flat side where they are severed from the shell and hence they sell for from one-sixth to one-seventh of the price of round pearls.

The oysters are first cultivated for three years before the substance, which is a tiny particle of mother of pearl, is introduced into the mollusk. After that they are left in the water for four or five years. Although the courteous Mr. Shintaro Wada did not say so, he probably knows that the Chinese knew something of this pearl culture in the 13th century but never perfected it. The Japanese pearl culture has only been in existence for the past twenty-five years and not until the last fifteen years have any pearls been exported to this country.

Another exhibit of modern Japanese work is the collection of Morimura chinaware. This is the first white ware the Japanese have ever produced and can easily be mistaken for fine Haviland china. Morimura, the manufacturer, is said to have spent $250,000 looking for a clay in Japan from which to manufacture the white ware, as until recently none had been found. His diligence was repaid in locating the proper clay, and now the china is exported to France and Austria and sold to unsuspecting dealers as Austrian and French ware.

Likewise Morimura's artists are sent to France, Germany, Italy and other art centers to study their art. They choose the best of these countries and then with the peculiar art of the Japanese make it "Japanezy" and sell it to these same countries.

There is a magnificent collection of cloisonnes, including pieces of the old wire process and specimens of the more modern wireless process, which is considered by the Japanese to be the last word in the manufacture of cloisonne. There are beautiful vases of the silver, copper and gold-base cloisonne, but the iron-base cloisonne has been left out of the collection, although it is considered the most beautiful and most artistic of all cloisonnes. This is for the simple reason that Americans have never appreciated this style of work so admired by the Japanese, and so the obliging exhibitors refrain from displaying something we are unable to appreciate.

The processes through which the cloisonnes are made are shown in all of the ten stages. One of the gems of the collection is a large oblong plate. The base is copper and both the wireless and the wire process have been used in the design. The piece is valued at $2500. A large Makuzu vase in the old blue that resembles the antique cloisonne is another striking piece of the exhibit. Even the manufacture of cloisonne did not originate with the Japanese. The same story of the adoption of the art of another people for themselves is told in the cloisonne exhibit, as the Chinese made cloisonne 2000 years ago, but then lost the secret, later rediscovered by the Japanese.

In one large case are a number of ancient Japanese idols. Among these are two terrible-looking images of the Wind God taken from the Temple of Nara, hundreds of years old and priceless in value. And with these are some of the very modern tapestries and fine embroidered work. Many of the beautifully-embroidered hangings look exactly like rare paintings. These are teakwood chairs wonderfully carved by hand, cabinets inlaid with mother of pearl and ivory, and a wonderful teakwood hand-carved Chinese bed. The Satsuma collection is also a joy to the lover of Japanese art.

When you have tired of looking at Satsumas and cloisonnes you can walk across the Prado to the charming little Japanese tea pavilion back of the Botanical Gardens, under the management of the same commercial association. Here, as you sit in the pavilion and look out upon the tiny Japanese garden with its well, its flowing stream and rustic bridges, dainty little Japanese maids will serve you with tea and rice cakes in the dainty manner that is characteristic of their people.

If you have any sporting proclivities go to the Japan Streets of Joy on the Isthmus, where every gambling game conceived by the Japanese is to be found. If lucky you may win anything from a bowl of goldfish to a kimono.

Apropos of the Japanese ways and their delightful characteristics is a story going the rounds of a little incident that occurred upon the visit of one of the great naval heroes of Japan to the exposition. It was understood that he could not speak English, and army and navy officers, city officials and exposition officials vied with each other in paying the honored guest attention, but were at more or less of a disadvantage, as all conversation was carried on through an interpreter.

Shortly before his departure someone suddenly came upon the dignitary conversing fluently in English with some of his party. Of course, no one would be so discourteous as to divulge the discovery to the Japanese party, but every one of those army and navy officers, city officials and exposition officials began to cudgel his brains to remember what he had said in English in the presence of the visitor.

But should you leave the Foreign and Domestic Arts Building to sip tea at the pavilion or gamble in the Joy Streets don't fail to return to see the collection of Persian rugs in that building. There are rare mosque prayer rugs hundreds of years old, beautiful Boukaras, Laver kirmans, that graced the palace of some ancient Persian king, and royal Saronk rugs. The exquisite colorings and the oriental designs with their significance are well worth the trip back from the tea garden to the exhibit.

MODERN SCHOOL FOR SOUTHWEST.

PLANS OUT FOR LARGE GRADE BUILDING ON BUDLONG NEAR FIFTY-NINTH.

Plans for a new grammar school that will mean much to a rapidly advancing district in southwest Los Angeles have just been completed by Alfred W. Rea and Charles E. Garstang of this city. The school will occupy a site on the east side of Budlong avenue just south of Fifty-ninth street and is one of the buildings provided for in the recent school bond issue. Its cost will be approximately $50,000.

The structure will contain on its ground, main and upper floors, eight class-rooms, domestic science, sloyd and nature study departments, a sewing room, principal's and teachers' rooms and a large auditorium. One of the features will be an open-air study room over the auditorium.

The building will be of a "T" shape and will have extreme dimensions of 155x115 feet. The construction will be of concrete and brick, ruffled brick being used for the facing, and artificial stone for the trim. All corridor floors and stairways will be of concrete.

The grounds have a frontage of 240 feet on Budlong avenue and a depth of 300 feet. A plan is now on foot to have new streets extended down each site of the property through the block.

SIGHTLY RESIDENCE.

Local Business Man Building Fine Bungalow on Serrano Avenue for Bride-to-Be.

An attractive seven-room bungalow of the English colonial type is being constructed by Victor E. Hecht, sales-manager of the Zellerbach Paper Company, on a residence lot recently purchased by him through the Janss Investment Company at No. 133 Serrano avenue. Mr. Hecht, whose approaching entry into the ranks of the benedicts was recently announced, plans to have his home ready for his bride upon their return from the wedding tour about August 1.

The bungalow will be 34x56 feet in size and will cost about $4000. The exterior will be finished in green and white. Frank M. Tyler is the architect and T. O. Reese the contractor.

AWARD MADE ON SHORE SCHOOL.

LOS ANGELES CONCERN TO ERECT FINE SCHOLASTIC GROUP.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDONDO BEACH, May 22.—The general contract for the erection of the new High School group at this place was awarded, during the week to the Los Angeles Planing Mill Company at about $105,000. J. T. Newell of Los Angeles will have charge of the plumbing, having received the contract for this work at $5500. The H. O. Nay Company of Pasadena was given the contract for the heating and ventilation equipment at $10,000.

The group will include five buildings in all, the largest being the administration building, which will be 85x130 feet in size and two stories high. This structure will contain, in addition to the offices of the school departments of music and art, a library and study hall, an auditorium seating 1000.

The science and household arts building will stand to the left of the administration building and the commercial and classics building to the right, the three edifices being connected by covered cloisters. Both of the flanking buildings will have ground dimensions of 61x102 feet.

The fourth member of the group will be the domestic science structure of the present school, remodeled to serve as a manual arts building. The fifth building will be a gymnasium and will be placed to the rear of the other structures.

The buildings throughout will follow classic lines. The three main structures will be of brick construction and will have cement plaster exterior finish, the columns and ornamentation being of cast stone. Allison & Allison are the architects.

noon or evening, when humanity enhances rather than diminishes the pleasure of the situation. The Zone is the one place at the fair where the people are an agreeable addition instead of a detriment. An empty amusement street is the most dismal thing in the world and the Zone is only at its best when it is crowded and noisy. If you do not care to take in everything on the Zone, which will take more than a day, I recommend as the most enjoyable things Toyland, Creation, the Panama Canal, the Aeroscope, the Tehuantepec Village, the Scenic Railway, and for eating and dancing purposes, Old Faithful Inn, in the Yellowstone Park concession.

WHOLE DAY FOR FINE ARTS.

The Palaces of Fine Arts should have a day of its own, and a day when there are not many people around. People in the Palace of Fine Arts will afford you a good deal of amusement by their comments, such as, "If I couldn't do better than that Gainsborough landscape, I wouldn't paint at all." Be sure to get a guide book in the Palace of Fine Arts, otherwise, you may be looking at a Whistler or a Turner without knowing it, unless you happen to be familiar with the picture.

AT NIGHT.

The illumination of the grounds begins at 6:30 when I strongly advise you to be in the South Gardens in front of the Tower of Jewels as the lights come on. The sight of the Tower of Jewels and the surrounding courts and gardens at night is really a wonderful experience, and one never to be forgotten. The fireworks in Yacht Harbor begin at 8 o'clock, and you walk through the Court of the Universe to the Marina to obtain the best view of the effects.

The exposition closes at 12 o'clock at night which seems early, but which is a very comfortable time, indeed, for the exhausted visitor to the exposition who has neither courage to leave before it's necessary, nor the strength to remain one moment longer.

SINGER BUYS KNOLL.

Famous Soprano Purchaser of Five-acre Hill Plot in Covina Section. Will Build Attractive Home.

The purchase by Ellen Beach Yaw of a five-acre plot of ground in the new Baldwin Heights subdivision in the San Gabriel Valley is reported by Badger & Cochran, sales agents for that property. The famous singer bought the ground as the site for a home, and will lay out one of the most attractive country estates in the Covina district.

Her plans call not only for a residence for her own use, but for a group of bungalows and a community dining-room for the girls who come to her studios for instruction in music. At one end of the grounds provision is made for a small Greek theater, to be used for concerts.

The site is on a knoll overlooking the valley on one hand and looking toward the Puente Hills on the other. The place is approached by a drive leading to Covina. The property is near to a number of other plots recently sold by the agents, including pieces acquired by George Steckel, J. Rudell, David Unruh and the firm of Crouch & Kiefer of Covina.

The Baldwin Heights tract is a portion of the late E. J. ("Lucky") Baldwin's La Puente Rancho and comprises some 1400 acres of land lying a mile southeast of Covina. Water in quantity has been developed on the holding, there being two pumping plants that supply three reservoirs of 1,500,000 gallons capacity. Recently, roadways have been built through all portions of the land and an extensive tree-planting scheme carried out. The land is being sold for citrus fruits and avocados, a considerable portion having already been planted to lemons.

HANDSOME PLACE FOR WEST SIDE.

WORK TO BE STARTED THIS WEEK ON LARGE LUCERNE AVENUE MANSION.

One of the finest residences projected in Los Angeles this year is that to be erected by George E. Huntsberger at No. 450 Lucerne boulevard, for which a building permit was issued during the past week. The place, which was planned by Oliver P. Dennis and Henry H. Hewitt, will contain fifteen rooms and will be of brick construction, the roof being of slate. The house will follow French rennaissance lines and will cover a ground space of 75x65 feet. It will be set in the midst of large grounds. Construction will be begun by Huntsberger & Reed, the contractors, this week. A perspective of the place was recently published in The Times.

The contract was let during the past week for an attractive eight-room residence to be built by Miss Kathlyn Williams at No. 874 Bryan street. The dwelling was planned by Arthur B. Benton. F. Q. Stanton will start work this week on a nine-room brick house of the Colonial type at No. 427 Arden boulevard. Plans have been completed for an eight-room house to be built by M. L. Kelsey at No. 420 South Van Ness avenue. A. R. Kelly has prepared plans for an eight-room residence, to be erected by C. H. Keck at No. 1734 Taft avenue, in Hollywood. Excavations were started during the week for a seven-room house, to be erected by F. W. Bresee on Grand View drive, in the Hollywood foothills. T. M. Kristovich is about to start a seven-room residence on South Olive street, near Forty-ninth street.

Following are a number of bungalows upon which work is to be started within the next few days: Seven-room bungalow for W. P. Grovier, at No. 1212 West Vernon avenue; six-room bungalow for J. D. Stern, at No. 645 North Gramercy Place; six-room bungalow for Marie Blondeau, at No. 6705 De Longpre avenue; two four-room bungalows for Mrs. Maude V. Wills, at Nos. 1542 and 1544 Vista street, Hollywood; two five-room bungalows, for Carl Jenke, at Nos. 3439 and 3441 Arroyo Seco avenue; six five-room bungalows for Booth Investment Company, on South Olive street, between Pico and Fourteenth streets; four-room bungalow for A. W. Byer, at Rose Hill.

FARMINGTON PROGRESS.

The work of laying mains in the Farmington tract of the Robert B. Armstrong Company has been completed and every piece of property is now piped for water. All of the streets have been graded and oiling will begin within the next few days. The Armstrong company reports that the sales to date have aggregated $50,000 and that several recent buyers are about to start houses.

ARCHITECT BUYS SITE.

The Braly-Janss Company report the sale of a homesite in Brentwood Park to A. Wesley Eager, a local architect. The lot, with a frontage of 100 feet adjoining Grand boulevard commands a fine view of the mountains and the Santa Monica Canyon. The consideration is given at $3000. Mr. Eager expects to build an attractive residence.

Next Christmas You'll Buy—

—and pay fancy prices for fine, big juicy pears, and you'll wonder why it is that here in this semi-tropical country such fruit should EVER become a luxury.

The answer is that land in California GOOD ENOUGH to produce those famous Bartlett pears is very limited—practically only one section where the best pears can be raised. And that section is known as the Palmdale District, just 37 miles due north of Los Angeles on the main Valley line of the Southern Pacific. You can get there in an automobile by the macadamized county road in three hours.

Here, at Palmdale Pear Orchards, the city man who's got his whole heart set on having a little place all his own some sweet day, will find a very special and attractive proposition. 5, 10 and 20-acre tracts already leveled, fenced and planted to selected Bartlett Pear trees. By a special contract he may have his orchard developed by the Palmdale Land Company at nominal cost and continue to attend to his business.

Orchardists of wide experience in less profitable lines have been seriously interested in Palmdale Pear Orchards. They have found from personal interviews with the successful Bartlett Pear men in this district, that an unprecedented money-making opportunity IS here in this community—how and why it is possible for these independent orchardists to make as high as $1000 an acre—that the usual yield in the Palmdale section is from 4 to 6 tons an acre and that this fruit brings $60 to $90 per ton.

In the 25 years that Bartlett pears have been grown in the Palmdale District there has never been a single failure! So it would seem reasonable that YOU, as well as any man, should be able to make the same big profits.

Palmdale Pear Orchards are less than a mile from Palmdale; right on the Southern Pacific; have an abundant supply of sun-tempered GRAVITY water and are offered to you at $300 an acre, 20% down, balance over 5 years.

Unplanted lands with water, $225 an acre, 15% down, balance over 7 years.

Five acres of this proven Bartlett pear land should put any man in the limousine class by 1920.

SEEKS NEW HOME.

Redlands Y.W.C.A. May Purchase and Remodel Chapel. Activity in Lot Transfers is Reported.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, May 22.—The Y.W.C.A. of this city, will soon have a new home if the plans of the directors of the association work out. The scheme is for the purchase of the holding at the corner of Cajon street and Olive avenue, owned by Henry Fuller. The property was formerly occupied by the Turner & Turner Undertaking Company and the building was erected for a chapel. It is pointed out that the building could be remodeled at a reasonable cost and made into quarters that would meet the needs of the association in every way.

The Rev. F. A. Smith, formerly pastor of the Holiness church here, now an evangelist, has bought a $2500 home at No. 127 Calhoun street. M. W. H. Williams and G. H. Gowland have purchased from S. F. Kalbeck his fourth interest in the ten-acre orange grove in the Williams tract owned by the three men. The interest is valued at $4000. Mr. Kalbeck has taken as part payment for the property a lot on Alvarado street and another on Chesnut avenue.

There has been increased activity in the exchange of lots during the week. Fred A. Hill has sold two lots in Timmons addition to L. F. Clapp. Fred Benningsdorf has sold a lot in Rausch addition to J. C. Kubias. Lloyd Childers has sold a lot in Columbia tract to Charles Evans. Roy Cook has sold to Fred Hill a tract of land in the Yucaipa Valley and Joseph D. Simpson has sold two lots in University tract to Arthur M. Klein.

Middle Westerner Becomes Owner of $40,000 Citrus Holding in Bryn Mawr District.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BRYN MAWR, May 22.—J. H. Bowers has disposed of one of the most valuable groves in this section to John Kleinsasser. The property is valued at around $40,000 and comprises twenty-seven acres of orange orchard on Colton avenue, east of Mt. Vernon. Mr. Bowers had owned the ranch for about two years. The trees are all of good size.

Mr. Bowers had taken as part payment for the orchard a 240-acre wheat farm in Kansas. The value of this property is not given, although it is understood to be about $100 an acre. Mr. Kleinsasser has purchased the grove as an investment.

TRADE FOR RANCH.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, May 22.—A reported price of $1000 an acre was paid for the thirty-acre alfalfa ranch at the southwest corner of Franklin and Garey avenue last week. The place was sold to Henry and August Dobbert by W. D. Ball, the deal involving the transfer of H. B. Dobbert's five-acre orange grove at the corner of Cucamonga and Orange Grove avenues, August Dobbert's two and three-quarter-acre improved orange grove at Garey and Cucamonga avenues, and a fine residence property at No. 642 North Gordon street. H. B. Dobbert gets a twelve-acre piece of alfalfa that has improvements on it, and August Dobbert gets the other eighteen acres, which is unimproved.

PUTTING TRACT IN SHAPE.

Jacob Stern of the Stern Realty Company is getting the first subdivision of his new Leffingwell Heights tract of 264 acres in the Whittier-La Habra citrus belt, ready for the market. Contracts will be let immediately for the building of streets. A system of steel pipes for the delivery of irrigating and domestic water will be installed. Charles J. Claussen, who has been connected with the Redlands and Yucaipa Land Company during the past five years, in the sale of the Yucaipa Valley apple lands, is the sales manager for the tracts.

APARTMENTS STARTED.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

EL SEGUNDO, May 22.—R. F. Wilkie, who recently purchased a lot at the corner of Concord street and El Segundo avenue, has begun the construction of a $7000 apartment-house. Lumber is on the ground for a four-room bungalow to be erected by L. A. McCray at the corner of Virginia and Palm avenues. A three-room house is about to be started at Sheldon and Walnut streets.

FOR SUPERINTENDENT.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

HIGHLAND, May 22.—Work will probably begin in a few days on a new superintendent's cottage at the State hospital at Patton, bids for which have been submitted to the State engineering department. The plans call for a two-story, eight-room structure, to cost about $8500. The new cottage will replace an old one, which has been moved across the road. The old cottage will be used for nurses' quarters.

ELKS CLOSE DEAL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

RIVERSIDT, May 22.—Papers have been drawn covering the sale of the beautiful building erected a number of years ago by the Woman's Club-house Association, to the Riverside lodge of Elks. The valuation represented in the deal is said to be about $35,000. The property is opposite the Courthouse, at the corner of Main and Eleventh streets. It is the purpose of the Elks to remodel the interior to suit the needs of the organization. The women's clubs of the city will probably erect a more modest building on a close-in site.

Considering the low rates of wages and salaries in Greece, these figures certainly show "high cost of living." The Greeks living in the United States are decidedly better off in every way.

Unemployment in New York City.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor has just published as bulletin No. 172 a report on unemployment in New York City. The report is based on information obtained from a census of 104 city blocks, located in various sections of the city, carefully selected with the purpose of including a representative number of families of the various nationalities and all classes of industrial workers, combined with a census of all families in 3702 individual tenement-houses and residences, covering a still wider range of distribution. The figures obtained have been used as a basis for estimating the number unemployed in the city.

The enumeration was made in the first half of February, 1915, and therefore shows conditions of unemployment at that time. Information was obtained from 54,949 families having a total membership of 229,428 persons, of which number 95,443 were wage earners. Of these families, 11,723 had one or more wage earners out of work, showing an aggregate of 15,417 persons, or 16.2 per cent. of all wage earners in these families without employment of any kind. The total number of wage earners in New York City in 1915, estimated on the basis adopted by the Bureau of the Census, is approximately 2,455,000. The percentage of unemployment found among the members of 54,849 families visited (16.2) applied to this number shows that the total number of unemployed in Greater New York was about 398,000.

The above figures do not fully measure the amount of unemployment, for only those persons who had no employment whatever, regular or irregular, full time or part time, at the time of the agent's visit were recorded as unemployed. To find the full extent of unemployment it is necessary to secure information also in regard to the large amount of part-time or irregular employment existing in practically every industry. On account of the difficulty of securing definite information in regard to irregular or part-time workers, all such were included in the number employed. The above estimate of 398,000 unemployed, therefore, does not include any of the irregular or part-time workers.

A tabulation of the unemployed by persons of unemployment shows that 11.1 per cent. of all unemployed persons had been out of work over 180 days; 26.4 per cent., over 120 days; 39.3 per cent., over 90 days; 55.8 per cent., over 60 days; 76.4 per cent., over 30 days; 88.4 per cent., over 13 days; and 92.8 per cent., were out of work at least one week. The occupations or trades having the largest number of persons unemployed out of the total of 15,417 were: Common laborers, 2440; building trades, 2045; and the clothing trades, 1781. The fact is noted, however, that the figures were secured at a season of the year when work in the building trades and in the clothing trades is normally slack and that the number out of work reported for these trades was affected to a large extent by the slack season.

A tabulation of the percentages of unemployment in each of several selected occupations, based on the estimated total number of wage earners in those occupations, shows the percentages of persons out of work to be as follows: Marble and stone cutters, 47.3 per cent.; bricklayers and stone masons, 32.5 per cent.; carpenters, 25.9 per cent.; painters and paperhangers, 43.9 per cent.; plasterers, 37.1 per cent.; plumbers, gas and steam fitters, 23.1 per cent.; bakers, 16.3 per cent.; longshoremen and stevedores, 16.2 per cent.; machinists, 13.1 per cent.; stenographers and typists, 7 per cent.; and common laborers, combined without regard to industry, 34.2 per cent., while the percentage of unemployment in all occupations other than those named above is 13.9 per cent.

UNION AID TO DIRT.

Cleveland Unionites Boycotted "Clean-up Week" Because Notices were Printed in an Open Shop.

[American Industries:] The deep concern of union labor for the public good was touchingly demonstrated in Cleveland the other day. The Federation of Labor of that city, in conjunction with the local Typographical Union, always an uplifting element in any community, boycotted the "Clean-up Week," which had been arranged as a part of the campaign for a "better, brighter Cleveland."

The wrath of organized labor was incurred when a citizens' committee in charge of the campaign ordered 10,000 cards printed in colors by the Otis Lithograph Company, which conducts an open shop. Forthwith the unions, through the secretary of the Cleveland Federation of Labor, laid down the mandate that "it is better that the city should remain filthy than that city officials in any way help crush union labor by patronizing a plant which the unions believe unfair."

This contribution to the advancement of mankind is typical of the attitude of union labor. All other considerations are subordinated to the upbuilding of the labor trust. The unions believe a plant unfair, so, therefore, Cleveland must remain dirty as far as they are concerned. It is better that a thousand babies should die of filth-bred flies in the heat of summer months than that the Typographical Union should be deprived of the dues of a single printer. It is better that the city have a thousand fires from accumulated rubbish than deprive the moguls of organized labor of the tithes extracted from a single unwilling victim. Better that Cleveland be made a pesthole of vermin than allow citizens to work without license from the Mafia of organized labor.

Of course, the clean-up week will go merrily along without assistance from the disgruntled unionists. Fortunately in this instance the elected officials of the city had nothing to do with the printing of the hated open-shop products, as the unionists at first supposed, so the usual political pressure could not be brought to bear. The only effect the boycott will have is to bring the general public to a realization of the inspiriting character of unionists.

A BAFFLED LABOR UNION.

[EDITORIAL.]

WHEN the Holmes Home to shelter betrayed girls and aged, homeless old women and worse than orphaned, fatherless children, was in process of construction at Oklahoma City, the Bricklayers Union sent a walking delegate—at $10 per day—to investigate and report. He espied a non-union man at work on the walls. He announced that his worker must join the union, must pay $15 for so doing, that he must not lay over 400 brick a day (he was then laying 1200) and must not work on Saturday.

The superintendent of the work replied that the worker in question was conscientiously opposed to joining a union, that he had just buried his child, that he had a sick wife at home, that he was in a strange country and out of funds. The walking delegate then promised to do all he could to induce his union not to molest the worker, but he returned the next morning and stated that the demands of the union must be met. One of the committee in charge of the work thereupon invited the delegate to go "to a place underground where could be found a good hot fire the year around." But another member invited him into the reception-room of the home and prayed and wrestled with him until he found balm for his sin-sick soul, when he resigned from the union and aided in directing the building of the home.

The union refused to accept his resignation, fined him $160 for his recalcitrance, and threatened to hurl all sorts of sores and shames upon his bare head. As a converted man he could not really tell the union to go to hell, although he longed to backslide for about five minutes in order to make a recommendation of that nature.

The union committee returned to town in a rage and notified every brick and cement and stone company in the State that they would tie up every job that used their product if they gave or sold the Holmes Home any of their material. They also appointed a vocal committee to attend upon the workmen on the home—who were all receiving more than union wages—and yowl scab, scab at them, when they were going to and returning from their work.

These kindly efforts of the union to coerce non-union men into joining their organization all failed, and work upon the Holmes Home continued without intermission.

Labor's Unrest.

STRIKES AND STRIKERS OF THIS UNEASY WORLD.

UNION lyabor affiliated with the American Federation of Labor spent $4,280,305 of its wages money on strikes in 1913-14 labor year, as officially reported by Secretary Morrison of the American Federation of Labor. Candidly speaking, union worker, what at all commensurate benefit did you get for that vast waste of your wages money? The A. F. of L. spent only $9388.

The same report shows that 131,324 union workers were involved in the 957 strikes of that year, of which 236 were pending at the close of the year, chiefly, as follows:

Union—	Strikers.
United Mine Workers	58,000
Railway Carmen	10,000
Teamsters	7,300
Electrical Workers	4,600
Plumbers	4,540
Blacksmiths	4,000
Cigarmakers	3,976
Boilermakers	3,500
Hod carriers	3,200
A. F. of L. locals	2,704
Carpenters	2,568
Brewery Workers	2,321
Street Railway employees	2,294
Hotel and Restaurant employees	1,981
Timber Workers	1,785
Longshoremen	1,700
Textile Workers	1,509
Glove Workers	1,420
Machinists	1,407
Marble Workers	1,000
Meat Cutters	900
Molders	541

The chief strike expenditures without wages increases as a result were:

United Mine Workers	$2,965,702
Molders	234,618
Flint Glass Workers	65,499
Boilermakers	76,270
Blacksmiths	40,000
Hotel and Restaurant employees	42,000
Iron and Steel Workers	30,000
A. F. of L. locals	17,092
Hat and Cap Makers	20,500
Coopers	13,581
Marble Workers	15,000
Photo Engravers	19,703
Street Railway employees	25,860
Railway Carmen	9,780
Spinners	20,000
Tailors	12,098
Teamsters	17,000
Typographical Union	82,684
Boot and Shoe Workers	4,273
Carriage and Wagon Workers	2,500
Barbers	3,373
Bill Posters	1,200
Timber Workers	4,175
Stereotypers and Electrotypers	6,722

For a strike expenditure of $195,265 the 1407 striking machinists got a raise of 25 cents a day. Did it pay? Or the $54,164 strike cost by the 2568 carpenters for a raise of 5 cents per hour? Or the $120,000 expenditure by the 400 printing pressmen for a raise of 25 cents a day? Viewed broadly, and counting also the heavy wages loss and general demoralization consequent upon the idleness of the strikers, to say nothing of the enforced idleness and wages loss of dependent and collateral trades, do strikes ever really pay?

Latest advices indicate that the 850,000 British coal miners, though offered a 10 per cent. war bonus, are determined to strike for a permanent wage increase. Their demand is for a 20 per cent. raise.

One of the biggest fool things we have ever heard of is the recent strike of the weavers at the cotton mills of the Fall River Iron Works Company, Fall River, Mass. These weavers did not strike because their wages had been cut. There was no demand for a recognition of the "union." There was no lost time to be made up. There was no complaint that the operatives were not well paid and well treated. The weavers struck because they were required to leave their automatic looms running during the noon hour and for a short time at night, after the weavers had left the room. The weavers were not asked to put in one minute's overtime. The looms when left running were making extra production for the mill, and as the weavers are paid for the amount of cloth taken from their looms, this extra time meant extra earnings for the weavers. The strikers then are attempting to cut their own wages.

Ten million dollars was the cost, up to May 8, of the building tie-up in Chicago, caused by the strike of 11,000 carpenters, which throws 125,000 men out of work. The wages loss alone was $5,943,800, and it is still going on. The contractors lost $2,000,000 profits; Five thousand working carpenters were assessed $81,000 for the strike fund. Besides all this, the strikers admit there is a vast loss or waste in the depreciation of materials and machinery and the expense of borrowed capital.

Seventeen hundred weavers employed in the seven factories of the Borden mills at Fall River, Mass., have gone on strike rather than work twenty minutes a day longer than union time, even though they were to be paid for the extra time worked. The order to so work was the signal for a general strike. In these times striking for so trivial a cause, really no cause at all, is worse than foolish. It is criminal, as being sure to cause idleness and loss of wages by thousands of others who cannot work if the weavers fail to do their part.

American coastwise ships are sailing from New York in spite of the strike of skippers and officers belonging to the Neptune Association for a raise of pay averaging about $25 a month. Six lines have agreed to the demand, but six other large lines are holding out. Oilers, stokers and coal passers on the American line also struck for $20 a month more as a "war risk," though the company had already voluntarily added a "war risk" of $5 to the wages of all its men. The Neptune Association is sending wireless strike notices to employees on incoming vessels, and also sending tugs to meet them.

Radical labor leaders in Colorado are threatening another general strike because of the conviction for murder in the late strike of John R. Lawson, the labor leader who then led the fighting.

Chicago building contractors offer the striking carpenetrs an increase of 2½ cents an hour (from 65 to 67½ cents,) instead of the 5 cents an hour demanded. The strikers are voting on the offer, which was previously made. That looks like peace in sight.

The tramway men of London, Eng., have struck for more pay.

The Detroit street railway strike is over, the men having agreed on arbitration.

WATERED LABOR.

Pennsylvania Railroad Pays Million a Year for Superfluous Train Hands Required by Extra Crew Law.

[The Mediator:] It is stated in a report of the Pennsylvania Railroad that superfluous train hands demanded by the extra crew law of the State of Pennsylvania cost the road upward of $1,000,000 a year. This represents 5 per cent. upon a capital of $20,000,000. This is watered labor, of a kind far more intolerable than watered capital.

If multiplied by all railroads affected by such laws, the watered labor may be easily estimated at $100,000,000. Suppose the railroads of the United States were to issue a like amount of stock, with nothing behind it? What an outburst of public indignation there would be! And how seriously the credit of the railroads themselves would be damaged! Injury to a railroad's credit, it need hardly be said, means skimped maintenance and less efficient service.

But this actual $100,000,000 is something more than capital stock. Wages in every State take precedence of all fixed charges. This incubus, therefore, is a trifle worse than an issue of $100,000,000 5 per cent. bonds, plain water, ahead of all other obligations.

The sums thus expended to subsidized idlers would have at least five times the employing power if converted into upkeep and improvements. Labor unions, instead of employing more men, are really reducing employment to that extent. The utter unintelligence of sacrificing such substantial benefits to the workmen, for a prize relatively so small, is typical of a labor union policy which is becoming a positive menace.

Worked Too Fast—Fined.

[Philadelphia Telegraph:] Because he was said to have performed a certain part of his work in less than the allotted time, Max Lehman, a St. Louis brewery worker, was fined by the Brewery Workers' union and upon refusing to pay the fine was suspended from the union and subsequently lost his job.

This was brought out in the Circuit Court at St. Louis during the trial of Lehman's suit for damages against the officers of the union. Lehman said the charge that he had cleaned a 100 gallon vat in three-quarters of an hour, although the union prescribed an hour and fifteen minutes for such a task, was untrue.

Lehman was awarded $1010 damages on his plea for $5000.

Forty Millions Dollars Loss.

[New York Herald:] A settlement of the strike in the Eastern Ohio coal fields, that has kept 15,000 miners idle for thirteen months, and has cost more than $40,000,000, was accomplished last week by the Joint Scale Committee representing operators and miners. This announcement was made at the conclusion of their conference in Cleveland.

Operators at a caucus ratified the settlement, which was on the basis of 47 cents a ton, mine run.

Curing the Drunk Habit.

[Everybody's Magazine:] Seth had been trying to cure himself of the alcohol habit by eating instead of drinking when the craving came on. One day he met a friend, who asked him how the plan had worked.

Seth said: "Fine. Whenever I've felt like drinking I've made for a quick lunch counter. Sometimes it's been hard. For instance, the other night in the room next to mine at the hotel a fellow shot himself. It was awful. There was a shot and then the body thudded to the floor. I jumped out of bed and dashed down four flights and made for the office with just enough breath left to pant to the clerk:

"'My goodness! The—man—in—the next—room—has—just—killed—himself—it—was—awful—for—pity's sake—give—me—some—ham—and eggs—and—a—piece—of—lemon pie.'"

Another Knockout.

HUMAN RIGHT TO EMPLOYMENT.

SUPREME COURT DECIDES FOR BOYCOTTED MAN.

A Union Hatter Who was Expelled from Membership and Prevented from Obtaining Work Recovers Damages from Two Union Officials Against Whom Suit was Brought.

[From a Booklet of the American Anti-Boycott Association:] The Supreme Court of Connecticut recently handed down a decision which reaffirms the sacred right of individuals to work and earn a livelihood without interference or hindrance. It is a blow at the most detestable form of combination, the labor trust, which aims to keep workers subjected to arbitrary union rules and regulations, and to levy fines for their violation or deny to a worker the right to earn a living.

Connors was a union hatter of Danbury, Ct., in 1909. He worked at his trade and faithfully paid the allotted tithes to the hatters' union for the privilege of laboring. In the course of time he and several others protested against the usurping of individual rights and liberties by the union. He was expelled forthwith for his mutiny and thereafter found it exceedingly difficult to obtain employment. Danbury was a closed shop town and the power of the union was great. The persecution, however, did not stop there. Connors was hooted at and stoned in the streets; he was forced to leave his boarding place and eventually to get out of town, but being a man of more than ordinary stamina he resolved to fight.

Suit was instituted for damages and a jury unanimously awarded him $1100 damages against two union officials, Nees and Connolly, and the decision has just been upheld by the Supreme Court of the State.

The court in deciding the case, which was fought for Connors by the American Anti-Boycott Association, said in part:

"It needs no argument to demonstrate that any combination between employers and employed which creates a condition in a community such as has been hereinbefore described is a serious menace to the craftsman or workingman, who, in the exercise of his free right of choice, does not wish to join a union. It is calculated to place upon his freedom of choice and action a coercion which leaves him no longer wholly free. Its tendency is to expose him to the tyranny of the will of others, and to bring about a monopoly which will exclude what he has to dispose of and other people need from the open market, or perhaps from any market.

"Monopolies of things of common use and need, whether created by governmental grant or by the acts of private persons or corporations, are odious and their existence is contrary to public policy. They were condemned by the common law of England and, although changing in their more common source, have remained under a like condemnation in that country and this to this day. They are especially intolerable where they concern the basic resource of individual existence, to wit, the capacity to labor. Their beneficiaries may enjoy the favors they bestow, and feel injured when deprived of them. But the interest of the public outweighs that of individuals, and the public at large can see nothing but danger in the monopoly of anything of which there is a common need or which is a common resource of life. This is an old and familiar doctrine in whose maintenance none have as deep a concern as the poor, the humble and those who live by the labor of their hands. The monopoly need not be complete to come under the bane of the law. 'It is sufficient if the agreement tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.'

"It would be difficult, we imagine, to find a more marked instance of a large community given over to a single industry and dependent upon employment in that industry. If ever there was a situation where the individual, if for any reason satisfactory to himself, however mistaken it might be, chose not to join a union, was placed in a more disadvantageous position, or brought under a greater pressure to surrender his freedom of choice, it certainly has not been one of ordinary occurrence.

"It is equally apparent that not only the seeds but the fruit of monopoly were present in striking measure. The field of labor was substantially monopolized. The door of opportunity to work at his trade was not open to any hatter in this great hive of industry, save only a very few, except by the route of the union. To the plaintiff and other skilled hand workmen it was absolutely shut unless they consented to take up a line of work not the most advantageous to themselves, and to which they were not accustomed.

"The nearest approach to an announcement of defendant's position is to be found in one of his concluding paragraphs, as follows: 'We believe that the United Hatters of North America, as the owners and controllers of the union label, could absorb all of the labor market in any community, so that persons who were not members of the organization would be unable to obtain work at hatting, in that community, as long as the label stands for what it does, in the shape of skilled labor, improved sanitary conditions, and long-term contracts. These advantages to society at large would outweigh any disadvantages which might accrue to a few people desiring to obtain work, because the rule of law in relation to a closed shop as enunciated in the Curran case, is based upon the theory that the excluded workman is equally as good as the member of the organization, and that all have an equal right to employment. But it is respectfully submitted that this rule of the common law is based upon reason, and when the reason for the existence of the rule ceases the rule itself ceases.'

"This is a unique and astonishing proposition, both for what it says and what it implies, to be addressed to a court in this country with its common law inheritance as to the importance of safeguarding individual rights and its dedication to freedom of action within the law and equal rights for every member of society. Beside it the emphatic language of our courts, repeatedly uttered, reads strangely. Under the application of its controlling rule, monopolies might become transferred into blessings to be cherished, oppression into an agency of the public weal, and the tyranny of a majority into a benevolent factor in social progress. The end would justify, and even sanctify, the means. We must decline to place our seal of approval upon any such revolutionary doctrine."

CAUSE OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

Adverse Legislation and Warfare Against Capital Cause Small Investors to Withdraw from Business.

[Pacific Coast Bulletin:] Labor and capital are partners, and an injury to one is an injury to both. Labor and capital always have, and always will languish or prosper together. There cannot possibly be good times for one and hard times for the other. They are absolute partners, and while there may be temporary and minor differences, in the main, the weal of one is the weal of both.

Idle capital makes idle men. One great trouble is, there are at present too many idle employers in this country. If we can get them to work the idle men will soon disappear.

The wage-earners themselves have been largely responsible for this unfortunate condition of affairs. The politicians and officeholders have waged this war on capital, because they thought that was what you wanted. Ambitious, but unwise, labor-union leaders have persistently urged all kinds of class legislation against the employer, supposedly in favor of employees. Much of this legislation has been passed by national and State Legislatures. Full crew bills, eight-hour bills, minimum work and maximum wage bills, seamen's bills—all tending to make it more difficult for capital to do business successfully. The result has been to drive hundreds of thousands of small investors out of business. The country is now feeling the effects.

War on capital does not seriously disturb Rockefeller, Carnegie, Vanderbilt and men like that. While they may be hurt, they can get along. Their interests are large, and their investments, being permanent, cannot very well be withdrawn from business. While the capital of these very rich men is large, it is only a drop in the bucket as compared with the aggregate capital of the small investors—men with from a few hundred to a few thousand dollars to employ. These small investors are the ones who have been frightened and driven out of business by the long continued and unrelenting warfare against capital. A very large proportion of the capital of the country is controlled by these small investors. They can employ it or let it lie idle, as they see fit. At present they are letting it lie idle. They would rather have it at work if they could, because it does not do them any good while idle, but they are afraid to risk it. These people can see little to gain by investing their money under present conditions, and they might lose it entirely. They prefer not to take the chances. Bankers will tell you there is plenty of capital in the country, but it is not working. Nobody wants to take a chance. When you come to think of it you can hardly blame them. All kinds of radical laws have been passed and many more have been proposed, tending toward the confiscation of capital. As long as this keeps up unemployment will continue, and it will grow worse. This country now affords a fair illustration of labor undertaking to get along without capital.

COMPENSATION LAW MAY BE ILLEGAL.

NEW YORK JUDGE THINKS SO BUT HIS RULING IS THE OTHER WAY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 20.—Supreme Court Justice Crane announced from the bench today that there was a grave question in his mind as to the constitutionality of the State workmen's compensation law.

Anna Herkey, worker in a cigar factory, sued her employers for $10,000 for injuries sustained in an accident. The defendants demurred saying the claim should be settled through the workmen's compensation commission. To the demurrer the girl's attorney replied that the Federal Constitution gave their client the right to sue. Justice Crane said he was inclined to agree with their contention, but decided against them. The case was appealed.

Pay a Heavy Tax.

The union carpenters who have remained at work in Chicago, estimated at from 4000 to 7000 in number, have been paying 10 cents an hour from their wages for the benefit of the strikers. Suppose the increased wages demanded should be granted, after one month's strike, it would take these working carpenters two months to get back their 10-cents-an-hour assessment before they could enjoy their advanced wages. The men who have been on strike would have to work considerably over a year's time before the increase of wages would pay them back the amount lost by even one month of idleness. Striking is thus seen to be a rather unprofitable diversion.

10 Minutes to MARKET-

Today the city of Corona is bringing in from Los Angeles all the vegetables, berries and farm products it consumes—6000 people are eager to buy fresh "stuffs" from Corona Farms. Ask the Corona grocer—his money is waiting to buy the products that YOU CAN RAISE.

Come to Corona Farms—10 minutes from Corona—right on the new auto boulevard. Richest soil, and abundance of cheap water. Cows, hogs, chickens and fruits will pile up a steady yearly income bigger than you can make in the city. Be independent—one hour from Los Angeles.

LOCAL FIRMS IN LARGE DEALS.

Big Madera County Tracts Change Ownership.

San Francisco and San Diego Holdings Involved.

Total Consideration is Over Half-million.

Two important transfers of acreage in Madera county were concluded during the past week through the agency of Los Angeles realty concerns. Both transactions were largely of the nature of exchanges. In one instance the consideration was given at $400,000 and in the other at $150,000. The trades rank among the largest of their character reported to date for the year.

The larger deal is announced by the Erkenbrecher Syndicate and involved the sale for the Sharon Farms Company to Houghton Sawyer and B. D. Ma— Greene of San Francisco, of 4160 acres of farm land situated near the town of Sharon. As part of the consideration the Sharon Farms Company received a six-story brick apartment-house at the corner of Sacramento and Powell streets; a three-story reinforced concrete apartment-house on Post street near Gough, and a three-story frame building at Golden Gate avenue and Franklin street, all in the Bay City.

Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Greene will improve the Madera county tract and will plant it to olives and other fruits. Byron Erkenbrecher, president of the Erkenbrecher Syndicate, was assisted in the deal by A. W. Thompson and R. C. P. Smith.

The other Madera county transfer involved a tract of 3800 acres seventeen miles north of Fresno, the property being widely known as the Armstrong ranch. The holding was exchanged by Anderson Bros. of Fresno, for property at the southeast corner of Seventh street and Gladys avenue in this city and a property in San Diego, both owned by the Tropical Investment Company of which W. O. Kay of Salt Lake City, is president.

The ranch is improved with a number of buildings and is well stocked. Close to 3000 acres are in grain, the rest being in pasture. The new owners will hold the property as an investment.

The Los Angeles property entering into the trade has a frontage of fifty-two feet on East Seventh street by a depth of 109 feet on Gladys avenue, the improvements being of only nominal value. The holding was traded in at a given value of $50,000. The other property consists of a three-story wholesale building at Fifth and K streets, in San Diego, and went in at a reported valuation of $100,000.

Charles P. Halfhill of Halfhill & Converse, represented Anderson Bros. in the trade, while Harry C. Cook, with W. M. Garland & Co., looked after the interests of the Tropical Investment Company.

LARGE HOSTELRY CHANGES HANDS.

HOTEL SNOW AT SIXTH AND FLOWER STREETS UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

E. W. Cason & Company, associated hotel brokers, report the sale of the furnishings of the Hotel Snow, at the southwest corner of Sixth and Flower streets, for the Snow Hotel Company to W. T. Clark, formerly proprietor of the Abbotsford Inn, at Eighth and Hope streets. A new lease was entered into between F. C. Finkle, owner of the property, and M. T. Clark, for a term of years at $600 per month. Possession has been given.

The Hotel Snow was built by Mr. Finkle five years ago at a cost of about $100,000. The building is of reinforced concrete construction and contains ninety rooms and a lobby. The first lessee was the Snow Hotel Company.

COUNTRY PLACE AT CITY'S EDGE.

SIGHTLY NEW FOOTHILL HOME OF LOCAL ATTORNEY SET IN LARGE GROUNDS.

One of the most interesting houses erected in the Hollywood district during the present year is the new country home of Raymond W. Stephens, of the law firm of Stephens & Stephens, in the Hollywood Acres tract, just west of the city. The residence was the first to be started in the subdivision, which is owned by Judge A. M. Stephens, father of the builder, and which comprises some eighty acres of sightly foothill land, immediately adjoining the present built-up area of the northwest suburb.

The house is suggestive of the Colonial, and has low, "homey" proportion, the roof lines being a particularly interesting feature of the plan. The first floor is at grade level, French doors opening directly into the yard from all the rooms. The grounds are large, comprising nearly two acres, and have been laid out in gardens, lawn, an orchard and a tennis court. Frank T. Kegley, the architect, is also in charge of the landscaping.

The dwelling is entered from the south by a hall which crosses the building in about the center and opens into an inclosed living porch forty feet in length on the north side. To the left of the hall is the living-room, 24x36 feet in size, and on the right are the dining-room, breakfast-room and kitchen. There are six rooms, four baths and a kitchenette on the second floor.

The Hollywood Acres tract is one of the newest of the high-class foothill subdivisions and has been attractively improved by the owner. The property is bounded on the north by Santa Monica boulevard and has been bisected from north to south by a wide macadamized drive, bordered by wide parkings. On a large site to the north of the new Stephens house, Walter F. Dodge is building a $30,000 mansion of reinforced concrete construction.

Beckoning

TO YOU in search of a profitable little fruit farm or garden—to you who seek an ideal place to live—to you who want a safe, well-paying investment—BALDWIN HEIGHTS IS BECKONING.

If you love the grandeur of the mountains, and the far-sweep of valley scene, your first sight of Baldwin Heights will make you positively "HUNGRY" for a place out here—just as it made Ellen Beach Yaw, the noted singer, George Steckel, the portrait photographer, Harry Clifford Lott, and many other lovers of the beautiful, who, after beholding this wonderful scenic masterpiece, bought sites for homes.

The prices are surprisingly low for property of this value. Some of the land is planted to Eureka lemons 12 to 18 months old. Terms can be arranged to suit you. Perfect title and protective building restrictions.

This is ideal land and climate for citrus fruits, avocados, winter vegetables and intensive farming. No frosts or high winds. Water in abundance piped to all parts of property.

Property within walking distance of the city of Covina, and 45 minutes by electric cars from Los Angeles.

Excursions every Thursday, leaving our offices at 10:30 a.m. Special trips by arrangement any day.

BOTH GAINS AND LOSSES REPORTED

BUILDING AVERAGE FOR ALL CITIES IS GOOD.

Eastern Structural Publication Sees Occasion for Optimism in Construction Statistics of One Hundred Places—Things Picking up in the East.

While there was a slight decrease in building operations in the leading cities of the United States for April, the showing is satisfactory by comparison with the corresponding month a year ago, according to Construction News, which declares that no correct estimate of conditions can be formed unless the entire world situation is taken into consideration. Permits were taken out in April in 100 cities, says the same authority, for 27,408 buildings, involving a total estimated cost of $70,256,120, as against 27,790 buildings, aggregating in cost $74,712,981, for the same month in 1914. This is a decrease of 382 buildings and of $4,456,861, or 6 per cent. in the valuation. In the total number of cities there were increases in forty and decreases in sixty.

"Spotted" describes the condition throughout the country most accurately. New York, New England, and the central lake States, reflected the greatest activity, but even in these sections there were some heavy losses. There were heavy losses in the Pacific Coast cities with the exception of two or three small places. An increase of 25 per cent. in New York City indicated satisfactory improvement in comparison with the recent past. The effect of labor troubles in Chicago is clearly discernible in a decrease of 28 per cent.—almost remarkable when taken in comparison with former conditions, building having been continuously active in the Windy City, notwithstanding the situation abroad.

Brooklyn had a gain of 1 and Boston a loss of 4 per cent., St. Louis suffering a somewhat severe loss of 43 per cent. There were increases in Detroit of 42 per cent.; Cleveland, 19; Minneapolis, 2; Bridgeport, 608; Cincinnati, 37; Kansas City, 53; Washington, 21; Toledo, 24; Hartford, 28; New Haven, 86; Newark, 27; Worcester, 12; Oakland, 31; Memphis, 4; New Orleans, 65; Denver, 45; Grand Rapids, 126; Des Moines, 24, and St. Joseph, Mo., 74.

San Francisco had a loss of 4 per cent.; Los Angeles, 16; Buffalo, 7; Milwaukee, 13; Pittsburgh, 16; Seattle, 32; St. Paul 31; Indianapolis, 25; Portland, 27; Atlanta, 21; Columbus, 40; Omaha, 34; Baltimore, 39; Richmond, Va., 34; Albany, 75; Louisville, 38; Salt Lake City, 21; Dayton, 50; Spokane, 41; Pasadena, 38; San Diego, 60; Sacramento, 72; Tacoma, 54, and Colorado Springs, 80.

TO LOCAL FIRMS.

Three Los Angeles Concerns to Furnish Lighting Equipment for Big Department Store.

Contracts for the lighting equipment of the new J. W. Robinson Company store at Seventh, Grand and Hope were let in the past week to three Los Angeles firms, the total amount involved in the awards being $10,000. Included in the contracts is a provision for the installation of a newly-perfected system of indirect lighting for the display windows.

The system is in use only in a very few of the biggest and most down-to-date stores in the country and will be installed in the Robinson store by the Johns-Manville Co. The same concern will install the elevator lighting system, which will be so arranged that the entire elevator shaft is kept brilliantly lighted all of the time.

To the Wagner-Woodruff Co. was awarded a contract for fixtures, and to the Foulkes Company a contract for cord and socket installations.

NEW RAMONA ACRES.

To Mrs. Julia Blake, a Los Angeles builder, the Janss Investment Company has sold a little farm tract at New Ramona Acres on which the purchaser will erect an attractive bungalow. Other sales in the San Gabriel Valley tract and its vicinity are reported by the company to the following buyers: M. Cassaville, $1600; H. E. Durbin, $900; S. Harris, tract at Wilmar, $1400; N. S. Wells, $900; Frank Stockwell, $1100; Lewis Schillinger, $1000; F. Morton, $1325; H. Wehrley, $1200, and Mrs. Julia Blake, $1300.

Brentwood Park

It has been the plan of all buyers in Brentwood Park to set a standard of improvement which immediately stamps this subdivision as being one of the better class.

Already a community of home-loving, up-building people is being formed, who believe that the best existence is really found close to nature, free from the trying effects of city life.

If you don't know what this different existence is, ask any Brentwood Park resident and then try it yourself.

In a great park like this, with flowers and trees and superior attractions, it is but natural to expect those who build homes here to carry out their part in preserving the beneficial harmony.

There is a Reason for the building activity in Brentwood Park. Let us tell you why.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS

BY DOROTHY B. JOHNSTON.

THE club annals this week are largely devoted to a summary of the year's work or results of elections. With over 125 federated clubs in Los Angeles district, alone—30,000 clubwomen strong—the tremendous activities and accomplishments can be understood.

Within a month the usual cessation of club life for a three-months' vacation will have commenced. And with the early fall will come renewed energies and hopes and strength, all to play an important share in still greater achievements.

Every clubwoman who was not able to attend the State Federation, awaited a report of its deliberations eagerly, and they all hope the next year will but add to the splendid work done in the past by the California State Federation of Women's Clubs.

Women's Press Club.

Mrs. Margaret C. LaGrange, who is to be chief speaker at the Southern California Women's Press Club dinner next Tuesday night, is an interesting newcomer to Los Angeles. She has established a unique educational center, which embraces in its curriculum, a combination of methods gleaned from years' observation abroad which embrace the McMilian idea for advanced pupils found in England, the Montessori apparatus for the juveniles, and several advanced ideas taken from the schools of Switzerland.

Mrs. LaGrange made two around-the-world trips, including a visit to religious institutions of the Orient and educational and art centers of Europe. Four years ago she visited Los Angeles, where she found the necessary mental and artistic atmosphere for her plan to unfold.

She has been for ten years a prominent lecturer, and has written special articles along dramatic and psychological lines, as well as teacher of business efficiency. Her lectures have taken her to Calcutta, India, through Europe and before prominent clubs of the East and West.

Ebell Club.

Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, Commissioner of Immigration to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, will lecture before the Ebell Club tomorrow afternoon, on "Woman From a World View Point."

An important meeting of the Shakespeare section of Ebell is the final closing luncheon, to be held next Saturday at 12:30 o'clock, with a programme at 2 o'clock. Special features are to be included, with readings from King Lear and Richard III, by Mrs. C. S. Hall and Mrs. George Burket Logan, and Shakespeare songs by another talented member, Mrs. Edmund E. Smith. Other members will take texts from some play studied the past year, and will give interesting lay sermons. Mrs. Edward North is to give a resume of achievements. Miss M. E. Elliott is responsible for the success of the Shakespeare section.

All departments are finishing up their year's work this week, but two sections having meetings during June—the Browning Study and Music.

Hollywood Woman's Club.

Wednesday was Drama Day, at the Hollywood Woman's Club, and Mrs. Gustave Detzer, chairman of that department, introduced Miss Arri Rottman, who gave a fine rendition of "The Maker of Dreams," by Dodson, and "The Snare of the Fowler," by Beulah Marie Dix. At the civics session "The Modern Drama as a Social Force" was presented in an able paper by Mrs. Eleanor B. Jones. In line with a forceful round table discussion on "Peace," by Mrs. Davidson's Social Science class, Mrs. Smith, the president, suggested the resolution, which received a unanimous vote, that the Woman's Club of Hollywood become a member of the Woman's Peace Party.

There is unusual interest in the programme to be given next Wednesday afternoon by Miss Maude B. Fischer. The subject is Eurhythmics of Jaques-Dalcrozes as applied not only to music, but to an all around development of the mental and physical capabilities. Miss Fischer will precede class demonstration by a short talk on the principles upon which the work is founded. Hostesses for the day are Miss Blanche Hillman and Mmes. Clarence Merrill, M. P. Morrow, Otis Turner, Chas. W. Kent and L. B. Joralman.

The Shakespeare section, Mrs. Samuel Garrett, instructor, will hold its last meeting for the year next Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

The Million Club.

Charles Farwell Edson gave a talk on municipal music before the Million Club last Wednesday afternoon. He voiced his plan of building a municipal auditorium upon the old Normal site, grouping around it the library and art institute.

Mr. Woods, bringing with him a letter from Judge Lindsay of Denver, was a guest of the afternoon, and spoke upon the municipal auditorium of Denver and Judge Lindsay's great work. Another speaker was Mrs. Meyers, who told of progress being made on the Juvenile Exposition.

The Ruskin Art Club.

Mrs. W. J. Washburn of No. 2200 Harvard boulevard will entertain the Ruskin Art Club next Wednesday. Father Datin of Pasadena is to review "Jean Christophe," by Romaine Rolland. The club is also invited to a picnic luncheon June 9, on the grounds of Mrs. R. B. Ashley, Pasadena.

Business Woman's Civic Club.

Cromwell Galpin of Eagle Rock will address the Business Woman's Civic Club on "Travels" tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock. A special invitation is extended to strangers. The club meets in the lecture hall of the public library, on the tenth floor of the Metropolitan Building. It is recreation evennig. As Monday, the 31st inst., will be a holiday, there will be no meeting.

Owing to the varied opinion of the qualification of different nominees for public office, and yet realizing the need of women for positions in which they interview and deal with women and children, the club at its last meeting indorsed the candidacy of women for positions pertaining to occupations in which women are largely and actively engaged.

At this same meeting a telegram was authorized sent to President Wilson expressing confidence in him.

The Wednesday Club.

Musical selections, Louis XI and Dauphin Charles, written especially for the Wednesday Mornnig Club by Mme. A. de Courlon, are to be presented by the French section of the club the 26th inst. Mrs. Hector Zahn is to be hostess for the noon luncheon.

Bird Life Lecture.

The Women's Club of the University of Southern California will hear an address on "Observations of Bird Life in Southern California," illustrated by representative birds from twenty-five different districts, next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, by Alfred Cookman of the Fish and Game Commission.

Friday Morning Club.

At the last meeting of the Friday Morning Club in June, the Civic Repertory Company will produce "The Little Shepherdess" for the club members. The play is from the French of Andre Riviori, translated by Barrett Clark. The company is a body of amateur actors who work together because of their mutual interest in drama. It will also offer a little Japanese pantomime. This will be the last programme of the Friday Morning Club before its midsummer recess.

The Cosmos Club.

The Cosmos Club will close its official year with a benefit ball at the Rex Arms apartments, No. 945 Orange street, next Friday night. The proceeds will go to the scholarship fund, set aside for the education of worthy children who otherwise would be compelled to assist in the support of the home. The money is given the parent each week and will amount to approximately $100 a year for each individual child.

The club enjoyed its annual luncheon at Hotel Maryland last Tuesday. Toasts were given to the newly-elected president, Mrs. C. S. DeLano, and the retiring president, Mrs. A. C. Hummelbaugh. Mrs. Hummelbaugh was presented by the club with a beautiful pin. A delightful programme followed, consisting of monologues, dialect stories by Miss Grace Noe, and vocal selections, including Swedish songs by Mrs. Alice Wernlund Rigg accompanied by Mrs. Woodmansee.

Congress of Mothers.

There will be a meeting of the Los Angeles District California Congress of Mothers next Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, in Blanchard Hall. The national officers will be present. Reservations for luncheon can be made not later than Monday by phoning Mrs. William M. Brizzolari, No. 2106 West Thirtieth street.

La Camarada Club.

At the residence of Mrs. S. B. Vandervoort, No. 418 West Thirty-third street, last Wednesday afternoon, the La Camarada Club elected Mrs. W. B. Scott, president; Mrs. M. Zuker, vice-president; Mrs. D. A. Judd, recording secretary; Mrs. B. F. Nance, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Harry P. Johnson, treasurer. Mrs. Hortense Jones-Dorr sang, accompanied by Mrs. Walker, and delicious refreshments were served. The club will hold its annual luncheon at the Maryland, Pasadena, Wednesday, June 9, to conclude the year's work.

Mrs. Edward Rankin Brainerd,

Unanimously chosen in primary election for the [illegible] presidency.

Progressive Household Club.

A social evening will be held at the Progressive Household Club next Thursday, with special musical entertainment, games and cards. Members may bring friends.

Philotos Club.

The Philotos Club met with its president, Mrs. B. O. Johnson, No. 839 Manhattan place, last Tuesday. Mrs. Austin was in charge of the programme on natural wonders of America.

Highland Park Ebell Club.

City Librarian Everett Perry presented the Los Angeles Library question before the Highland Park Ebell Club last Tuesday morning. In connection with the lecture, the secretary of the City Planning Association showed a number of slides, giving views of library buildings in other cities.

Among other things Mr. Perry stated that the Los Angeles library ranks seventh in the United States in point of circulation and that it is about double that of San Francisco. In the past two years the circulation of nonfiction has increased 70 per cent.

The club will have a musicale next Wednesday in addition to installation of officers. Miss Grace Jones, soloist; Mrs. Gertrude Ross, pianist; Katherine Thompson Higham, saxaphone, and William Worth Bailey, violin, will present the programme.

The Harmonia Club.

The Harmonia Club will hold its last meeting for the year next Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Trinity Auditorium. Mrs. Carl Johnson will be the leader, and the club will have as guests for the afternoon Mr. Robert Le Bruce, a baritone singer from New York, who will sing two Shakespearean sonnets set to his own music, and Miss Coe Marian Martin, who will play Harriet Ware's "Song of the Sea." The opera, "Natoma," will be the subject for the afternoon. Mrs. Carl Johnson will give the story of the opera.

Owensmouth Women's Club.

The Owensmouth Women's Club met at the home of Mrs. Tweedy the 14th inst. for an all-day meeting. Two new members, Mrs. Carder and Mrs. Croker were welcomed into the club. Mrs. L. C. Kimball gave a review of the district meeting at Santa Paula. Mrs. Ralph gave a review of Mrs. Pennybacker's address.

Women's Club of San Pedro.

The Women's Club of San Pedro is bringing to a close a most successful and prosperous year. The programmes in charge of Mrs. J. A. Elliott have been varied in style and both interesting and instructive, the travel section providing two splendid days. The average attendance has been larger than ever before. Election of officers, held last Tuesday, resulted in the choice of Mrs. Florence Schoneman for president, Mrs. Charles S. Bateman refusing to serve another year; Mrs. Richard C. Goodspeed, first vice-president; Mrs. S. E. Cressey, second vice-president; Mrs. Emma Rico, corresponding secretary; Mrs. E. A. Mills, treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Elliott, recording secretary; Miss Edward T. Richards, auditor, and Mrs. C. N. Krog and Mrs. Charles S. Bateman, directors.

The club will hold a June-day reception at 2:30 o'clock June 1 with members and out-of-town guests in attendance, and in the evening will have a dancing party for members and their friends.

On June 15, the annual reports will be read and the new officers installed. Mrs. Bateman recently gave a luncheon, using the club colors, green and white, complimentary to the directors and chairmen of committees.

Monrovia Women's Club.

The charming musicale programme given last Wednesday at the Monrovia Women's Club formally closed the season, although the annual outdoor picnic of the club members and their friends, always held in June, is still to be looked forward to.

In Wednesday's programme Miss Aileen Northup, violiniste, assisted by Alexander Garroway, tenor; Miss May Robison, pianiste, and Charles Davis, 'cellist, gave an interesting programme.

Help the Stomach Digest Your Food

When the stomach fails to digest and distribute that which is eaten, the bowels become clogged with a mass of waste and refuse that ferments and generates poisons that are gradually forced into the blood, causing distress and often serious illness.

Most people naturally object to the drastic cathartic and purgative agents that shock the system. A mild, gentle laxative, positive in its effect and that will quickly relieve constipation is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, sold by druggists at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle. It does not gripe or cramp, but acts easily and pleasantly and is therefore the most satisfactory remedy for children, women and elderly persons. For a free trial bottle write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 452 Washington St., Monticello, Ills.

FREE TO ASTHMA SUFFERERS

A New Home Cure That Anyone Can Use Without Discomfort or Loss of Time.

We have a New Method that cures Asthma, and we want you to try it at our expense. The club was decorated with hang-ing baskets of Shasta daisies and masses of roses. Mrs. A. E. Do headed the receiving line and tea was poured by Mmes. Jesse M. Sevier, L. Graver, G. K. Hester, W. B. Wei-gel and Miss Wardall.

Glendale Tuesday Club.

The Tuesday Club of Glendale is directing its every effort towards making the festival of fruits and flowers this week a grand success. The fun of the festival will be at its highest on the evening of the min-strel tea, at the High School audi-torium. Local talent, many of them prominent club women, will give this programme under the direction of Mrs. Wayland Brown of Tropico. The floral idea will be carried out in all the parts.

The dusky beauties of the chorus will represent the sunflower; the ballet people will be fruits; and the end men will represent roses. Mrs. Morris Cook will represent the Japanese wisteria, and give a special-ty, "Chinatown." Other features of the evening will be aesthetic dances by Therese Van Grove, the child prodigy, and a monologue by Miss Nanon Herren.

Re-elected President.

Mrs. Marvin Johnson has been re-elected president of the Gates Parent-Teacher Association, with Mrs. George Hand, first vice-presi-dent; Mrs. O. A. Bowers, second vice-president; Mrs. A. A. Helver, record-ing secretary, and Mrs. E. B. Gregory, treasurer. Plans are being made by this association for an entertainment next Friday, when fathers of the school children are to be guests.

The audience will al-them read and watch fingers in making baskets their own and each They will follow the into the gardens, into the sand piles and at play in the wading pool.

The work of the intermediate grades is phenomenal. "Cement Work the Need of the Future" is a practical picture of a practical work and shows the boys building sidewalks for their schools, fence posts, building blocks and plain and ornamental flower pots. The equipment of cooking schools is complete, and girls and boys are taught food values, scientific cooking and serving. The chef's class of young colored boys is a credit to the profession. A captivating picture shows boys in camp learning scientific open-air cookery—building campfires without waste, barbecuing, boiling and frying flapjacks with a clever turn of the wrist. Any lad who can cook in the open can "make good" in a well-appointed kitchen.

There are fascinating pictures of a fire drill, of wonderful work in basketry and reed furniture, of sewing and mending classes, of cobbler's classes for boys, where shoes of the neighborhood are mended free of charge—of pet animal shows more interesting than any ever held under a circus tent—rabbits, pigeons and puppies, pedigreed pussies and forlorn kittens rescued by children, prize-winning dogs and mongrels of every breed, goldfish, mother hens and baby chicks, lizards, toads and owls, lambs, goats and ponies, are conclusive evidence that the children of today are learning a lesson of mercy and of love for every living creature.

A picture that grips the heart is the long line of children from many lands, holding the flags of their nation—flags made by their own hands. On each face is graven a reverence for a national emblem and for the Stars and Stripes.

There was an exhibition of exceptional self-control when 2500 students of the Polytechnic High School were warned that a picture would be spoiled if a face was turned to the camera. Like an army pushing to the battle line, this great army of regularly enrolled students surged up the entrance and disappeared through the open doors. Boys and girls, men and women withstood the temptation to imitate Lot's wife. An hour later they faced the camera and a battery of huge arc lights in an interior picture that ranks as a remarkable photographic feat.

The pictures of the agricultural classes show practical work in plowing, harrowing and planting; in pruning, grafting and budding. A "close up" of the latter is a clean-cut demonstration of science and skill. The school gardens are wonderful and students learn the mysteries of soils and fertilizers and the scientific cultivation of flowers, vines, trees and grains.

Students are taught carpentry and have expert training in building materials and erection of houses and qualify for practical work as carpenters and builders. Students are being trained as architects and their work has taken permanent form in a model schoolhouse and cottage. Their drawings show a remarkable degree of art and sincerity of purpose, which also characterizes the training of civil engineers in the fields and of the electricians in outdoor and indoor work. Most remarkable are the pictures of students at work in the machine shops, in the planing mills, in the composing-rooms of the school papers, in the manufacturing of furniture and in the stage scenic painting class. They are trained for high-paying positions and are capable of earning more in a day than the graduates of former days were paid in a week.

A picture that will thrill music lovers is the orchestra of 1000 children who own $50,000 worth of instruments. The orchestra is on parade and makes a magnificent display. Practice on any instrument ceases to be drudgery when perfection qualifies for the most unique musical organization in the country.

There is a perfect balance of the mental and physical and the work is technically fine, whether in recitation, in the manual arts, in vocational work or the sports. Every picture taken in competitive work, the girls won. In archery the girls stretch the "long bow" and hit the bulls-eye and in a "close up" show, the skill of Cupid. The most difficult mathematical problems are worked out on a blackboard at lightning speed, girls finishing first. Delinquent and defective boys are taught to figure on baseball scores.

Pictures of rare interest include scientific boxing and wrestling, marathon racers, whole schools in outdoor physical culture drills, games of hockey and ball, the outdoor drawing classes and the artistic finish in the presentation of a Roman play by high school scholars. The outdoor study, the pure air, the glorious sunshine of California, the "roof" and "bungalow" schools give the finest physical development. In all, the pictures of all the schools and in all the thousands and thousands of children shown in 7000 feet of film, there is not an anaemic child or a nervous wreck.

The picture includes a feature important to women with limited laundry facilities as these privileges are free in the basement of schools in congested districts and show the actual progress of the work, even to hanging out the washing. Mothers, bowed with family cares, come to school and are shown seated around long tables learning the language of their adopted country while their babies creep around among the books.

The red-letter days of the Los Angeles schools are portrayed by a series of extraordinarily beautiful pictures—Flag Day, kite flying and Hans Christian Anderson Day—thousands of children on the trails and in the parks and all answering the call of the mountains and the lure of the sea, make an enchanting spectacle that is a midsummer's day dream. The masterpiece of all the pictures shows Dr. Edwards, head of the nature study department, seated on a rock at Point Firmin with a little boy on his knee, who listens with fascinated interest as the doctor explains the beauty of a shell to a tiny maid. The low tide eddies about their feet and in the distance, 3000 children search for the wonders of the sea. The significant title, "And They Ask Not in Vain" applies also to the tireless teachers, whose devotion and trained ability are making Los Angeles schools conspicuous.

The extraordinary work accomplished by "The Wonder Schools of Los Angeles" will be a revelation to every citizen in the city and its scope will astonish even the Board of Education and the teachers. Every foot of the 7000 feet of film tells a fascinating story of the achievements of Los Angeles schools. Each subject has its individual value and while the work in the schoolroom does not make such a fascinating showing as the manual training and vocational work, it exceeds the standard set by other schools and is notable for its thoroughness in the technicalities of book learning. As a mosaic, these pictures will be the wonder of the world. And the greatest lesson taught by them is the dignity of labor and that in everyday life a trained hand is as important as trained intellect.

It Ruins Hair to Wash It With Soap

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless,) is cheaper and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

Save Your Estate

As the successful business man grows older, he has serious thoughts touching the management of his business or estate after his death. He reads of the mistakes of men to whom estates and trust funds have been conveyed for safekeeping, and he makes up his mind to protect his heirs against that.

There is one sure way to do it and that is by appointing a strong, impersonal, State-protected trust company like Title Insurance and Trust Company as executor under the will.

I CURE PILES
Fistula and All Rectal Diseases
WITHOUT an OPERATION
By MY PAINLESS DISSOLVENT METHOD.

For twenty-five years I have been curing diseases of the rectum and lower bowel. During that time my experience as hospital and railroad surgeon, as college lecturer and professor, has enabled me to develop a method that is superior to others.

My method is not a "home cure" or a "correspondence treatment," but it is an application of skilled treatments administered under the most rigid antiseptic conditions in my office.

I solicit old, severe and obstinate cases of fistula, prolapsus, fissure and ulceration that have heretofore resisted all treatments employed. If you are a sufferer from rectal trouble I invite you to investigate my method thoroughly by talking or writing to any of my cured patients. If you will call at my office I will be pleased to give you the names and addresses of many well-known Los Angeles people I have cured, whom you may interview in regard to my treatment.

Read what a few well-known Southern California people have to say of my method. Many similar letters are on file in my office.

WELL-KNOWN SANTA MONICA MINISTER CURED.

This is to certify that Dr. C. H. White has cured me of a distressing hemorrhoidal ailment of 25 years' duration. His method of treatment is effective, but not severe. He has the appliances, the knowledge and the skill born of many years of specialization in this fruitful source of physical disease. He accomplishes all his claims in his advertising, and at reasonable expense.

I take pleasure in heartily commending the man and his methods.

WESLEY K. BEANS, Pastor First Methodist Episcopal Church, Santa Monica, Cal.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE SUPERINTENDENT CURED.

My Dear Mr. White: I am thankful for the privilege of bearing witness to your ability to treat, without pain, and with success, the delicate and disabling diseases which result from sedentary work. To all who need the services of a skillful, sympathetic and experienced specialist in your line, I heartily commend you.

Very sincerely yours,

ERVIN S. CHAPMAN, D.D., LL.D., Superintendent State Anti-Saloon League.

PRESIDENT OF WHITTIER COLLEGE CURED.

For more than ten years I was a sufferer from a painful affliction, which nearly ruined my usefulness as an organizer and teacher. Dr. C. H. White of Los Angeles has completely cured me by a process that was painless and rapid, and I desire to go on record as recommending the Doctor in diseases of his specialty.

Universal Dejection.

THIS YEAR OF MANY SORROWS.

Baptist Speaker Says Whole World is Depressed.

Finds Lessons Springing Out of Deepest Gloom.

Other Events of the Great Church Convention.

"This is a year of many sorrows," declared Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch of the Rochester Theological Seminary in an address before the northern Baptist convention last evening. "Many of us feel that our spirits have been scarred forever and the very lines of our faces have deepened."

Taking for his subject, "The Task of American Christianity as Related to National Life," the noted lecturer and teacher told of the universal mental and spiritual depression felt as a result of the great European war. He described his idea of Christianity's opportunity and obligation to influence national life.

"But it is also a year of education for all who have kept their minds open," Prof. Rauschenbusch continues. "Many half-true ideas have been crumpled up and thrown aside, and more are yet to follow. We have been crowded still further from our individualism and taught to think in terms of nationality, in terms of organized life.

"We are witnessing the wrestling of gigantic collective organisms. Usually we focus the flesh-and-blood reality of individual men and the nation seems shadowy, a figure of speech. But in such times as this the nation blazes forth as a supereminent power, seizing and commanding the individual by its spiritual authority, demanding service, labor, loyalty, suffering, death.

"All the belligerent nations are today measuring every man and every institution by their capacity to serve the nation in its agonized struggle for existence. This will be one of the constructive effects of this terrible destruction. It will tame and humble many proud and selfish interests. It will demand of all individuals and of all minor organizations subordination and self-sacrifice to a larger and higher collective good.

GLORY OF HUMAN LIFE.

"The gospel of Jesus Christ stands for the preciousness and glory of every human life, however humble or handicapped. It stands for the essential equality of rich and poor, high and low, educated and uneducated. Before God they are all one, all sinful, all responsible, all in need of salvation. It stands for the holy call of duty, for the surrender of selfishness and the readiness to serve. It stands for the law of love which binds men in community of interests as a great brotherhood. These great principles represent the highest spiritual convictions of the race.

"The churches owe it to the nation to take in hand the moral and religious education of the young more earnestly than ever. We can not afford to have a generation of young people grow up who know not God.

"Another task of Christianity is to steady the emotional life of the nation. It is just as simple for a nation to backslide into easy vices as for an individual. The old restraints of sex impulses have weakened; women are brushing away the old customs of self-restraint and taking liberties. We have drifted into indecent dances, lascivious dress, heavy expenditures for mere vanity, easy-going rupture of family life, and the dangerous spread of semi-respectable sex vice.

TASK OF CHRISTIANITY.

"Finally, it is the task of Christianity to fit out nations for a juster and more fraternal social life. We must move toward greater equity in the distribution of wealth or give up our claim to Christian democracy. Today large classes of our people have no property rights in the industrial outfit of the nation, no recognized place within the industrial organization, no protection against the curse of unemployment, no income for old age or time of failing health. They are disinherited on God's common earth. They are only semi-citizens of our republic.

"Christianity has not spoken its last word in this matter. We shall have to come to a clear conviction whether it is morally tolerable to live on unearned incomes. This is the most searching moral question before us. Our churches can be ever so emphatic on other moral issues, but unless they have an unmuffled message on the rightful basis of property, they will lose their moral leadership with the mass of the working part of the nation."

OUTDOORS LURING.

The lure of the outdoors, coming at the end of a week of strenuous activity, decreased the attendance at all three sessions yesterday. Delegates were decorated with Pasadena roses as they entered the Auditorium yesterday morning. Side trips and other counter-attractions took hundreds away from the gatherings.

At the morning session reports of various committees were presented and greetings were brought from the Southern Baptist Convention by special delegates. Charles S. Smith, former Governor of South Carolina; Dr. W. C. T. Hale of Kentucky, and Dr. J. T. Henderson, secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement for the Southern Convention, extended the hand of fellowship.

A report from the Committee on Denominational Day was presented by Dr. H. L. Morehouse. He said that one of the chief needs for activity on the part of this committee is in making known the vital and fundamental differences between the Baptists and the Pedobaptists (those believing in infant baptism,) since "the birthright or hereditary church membership theory, coupled with the doctrine of baptismal regeneration of infants, has proved disastrous to the spirituality of the bodies most strongly holding these views."

The report of the Permanent Commission on Moral and Religious Education carried with it suggestions for the conduct of church services suited to large and small congregations. The report of the Young People's Commission carried tentative plans for uniting all of the activities of the young people of the Baptist Church in North America through affiliation with the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which holds its annual convention at Oakland in July

The story of the "certain rich man" who had no more chance to enter heaven than could a camel pass through the eye of a needle was retold yesterday by Dr. Cortland Meyers of Boston at the noonday evangelistic meeting without the frills added by Biblical commentarians. He said the interpretation that the "eye of a needle" meant a small gate through a city wall was "bunk." He accepts the literal meaning. Dr. Meyers believes that the rich man will not reach heaven.

Prof. W. Rauschenbusch.

Member of the faculty of the Rochester Theological Seminary, who delivered one of the principal addresses yesterday at the Northern Baptist convention. He declared that it is the task of Christianity to "steady the emotional life of the nation."

WOMEN'S MEETING.

The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society had charge of the afternoon session. Mrs. A. G. Lester, president of the organization, was the principal speaker. Following is an extract of her address:

"The past few years have witnessed many hopeful changes in the attitude of our women toward missions. It is easier to interest women in missions. It is easier to talk missions, than it was even five years ago.

"There has also been a marked change in the attitude of our women toward the various mission enterprises. We can all remember when in almost every church the women were divided into separate circles. The one for home missions with its ardent group of followers, another for foreign missions only and still another composed of the Marthas, zealous for the church housekeeping, and the bazaar and church supper.

"A great change is taking place. Our women are finding out that not just one, but all of these activities belong to the life of the normal woman in the church. The West has led in this advance movement. Perhaps it is due in some measure to the environment of the broad prairies, the far-stretching plains, the high mountain peaks, where one gets a larger outlook upon life."

A joint meeting of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the American Home Mission Society was held at the night session. Following Prof. Rauschenbusch, Dr. Shailer Mathews of Chicago delivered an address on "American Christianity."

TO VOTE ON NEW CITY DISTRICT.

BAIRDSTOWN, WITH TWO THOUSAND PEOPLE, READY TO COME IN.

Los Angeles will vote on the annexation of the Bairdstown district at the general election June 1. This district voted on December 9, 1913, by a large majority, in favor of annexation and to assume its proportion of the bonded indebtedness of the city of Los Angeles.

The territory comprises an area of about three and one-half square miles. It includes all the Farmdale school district and has school buildings and facilities for ten teachers. It has an assessed valuation of about $1,500,000. It has a population of about 2000. It owns its lighting and water systems, and is the largest connecting link on the west between Los Angeles, South Pasadena and Alhambra.

The district is intersected by the Huntington boulevard and the Pasadena Short Line cars connecting Los Angeles, Pasadena and the San Gabriel Valley. It is about four miles from the business section and is located on the northeast about the same distance as the university and Exposition Park on the south.

OVER SCHOOL LEGISLATION.

Special Teachers' Club Discusses New Measures—Lawmakers Also Speak on the Question.

Fifty members of the Special Teachers' Club met yesterday in the Hotel Clark at a luncheon held to discuss the various legislative acts recently passed relating to school work. Several State Senators and Assemblymen were present and each was called upon to speak briefly concerning the new school laws.

Senator Thompson of Alhambra spoke on the poll tax law. Other speakers were Senator Cogswell of El Monte, Senator Butler of Los Angeles, Senator Anderson of Santa Ana and Assemblyman McKnight of Los Angeles. Miss A. M. Thomas, special representative of the club to Sacramento, also spoke. John R. Doyle, president of the club, presided.

NEW EDISON DIRECTOR.

Henry M. Robinson was selected a director of the Southern California Edison Company at a meeting of the board yesterday. He succeeds the late Walter S. Wright, who died on May 1. Mr. Robinson is a trustee of the Pacific Lumber Company, and also a director of the National Bank of California, the Union National Bank of Pasadena and the Title Insurance and Trust Company. He is a lawyer by profession and came to Southern California from Youngstown, O., about twelve years ago.

RECIPE to STOP DANDRUFF

This Home Made Mixture Stops Dandruff and Falling Hair and Aids Its Growth.

To a half pint of water add:

Bay Rum........................1 oz.
Barbo Compound..........a small box
Glycerine......................¼ oz.

These are all simple ingredients that you can buy from any druggist at very little cost, and mix them yourself. Apply to the scalp once a day for two weeks, then once every other week until all the mixture is used. A half pint should be enough to rid the head of dandruff and kill the dandruff germs. It stops the hair from falling out, and relieves itching and scalp diseases.

Although it is not dye, it acts upon the hair roots and will darken streaked, faded, gray hair in ten or fifteen days. It promotes the growth of the hair and makes harsh hair soft and glossy.
